Freezing Causes Breakdown
In Stored Pumpkins, Squash
Waiting until "the frost is on the pumpkin" is risky business when it comes to harvesting pumpkins for winter storage. Frost-bitten pumpkins—and squash too—break down rapidly, warns C. V. Holsinger, Iowa State College extension horticulturist. He suggests harvesting pumpkins and squash immediately and storing them in a moderately dry, cool place. Excessive storage heat tends to dry them out too rapidly.

Fall Time is Tiling Time!

Most farms in this immediate territory are pretty well drained. (That's what we thought until we really got some wet weather.) The low spots showed up this year. A string of a few hundred tile planted to the proper depth would probably have saved many bushels of grain.

We always have good drain tile on hand. Tile that will stand the freezing, tile that will lay well and not break down after 20 years in the ground. These tile are vitrified and will last for generations. A good tiler is essential as well as good tile. If you can't find a tiler let us know and we will try and help you out. We know of several good ones.

Redfield Blocks

For foundation work, REDFIELD BLOCKS will stand the "Gaff" at the frostline. They won't shale away when moisture or frost hits them. Have you ever seen block or brick that have shaled away? Sure you have, but the treats are on us if you can produce a "Redfield" tile or block that has shaled away.

Carrots Exposed To Heavy Freeze Cannot Be Stored
Around the middle of October is normally the deadline for harvesting carrots in Iowa, since they will not keep after exposure to a heavy freeze, says C. V. Holsinger, Iowa State College extension horticulturist.
A good storage plan, he says, is to place alternate layers of fairly dry leaves, carrots and sand in a tight keg or can and store the box in a cool, moderately dry cellar. The leaves help absorb moisture if the carrots are too damp. Turnips or beets may be interspersed with the carrots if desired.
Parsnips are dug in late October, and may be stored in a box of either sand or soil. Unlike carrots, they are usually allowed to freeze solid in the box and remain that way until needed.

Lesson for October

SPIRITUAL WORSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:4-6
John 4:19-24
GOLDEN TEXT—God is a Spirit, they that worship him must worship spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

"The First Commandment to worship God exclusively; and bids us to worship Him actually. The First Commandment forbids us to worship false gods under false forms (v. 20). Israel had lived among Egyptians, a people known for their worship of images, and was to enter into Canaan where there were many false gods. It was therefore careful not to forbid the worship of other gods, but to forbid the making of any kind, whether they were attempts to symbolize God. In studying this lesson need to exercise care lest we be misled by the point by talking only of wood and stone which are forbidden to be worshipped, and fail to apply to any improper use of which may prevail in our day. Let us be free from any preconceived notions as to the facts in the light of God's Word."

I. True Worship Required (Exod. 20:4-6).

This commandment expresses the principle that forbids idolatry in any form. The principle is twofold. (1) It forbids to make any likeness which to them represent being to be worshipped. It is not whether it be an image of a man or a beast, or a man believe God to be like an image of an angelic being, or a body, in fact "anything in the heaven above," or earth—such as a man or animal under the water—such as a fish. If such objects have been either by ourselves or others not bow down to them, nor any service to them. Let us examine our religious ceremonial practices in the light of God's commandment.

Observe that obedience to this command brings rich blessing. "Thousands" (v. 6), whereas disobedience is a curse not only to man who disobeys, but also to his descendants. Spiritual life often runs through whole families while spiritual life just as often runs through whole families. It is the man who gives his children his spiritual heritage, but who is that man who passes on to his children that spiritual death of his children?

II. False Worship Excluded (Exod. 32:1-8).

It comes to us as a reality that a people so highly privileged as well-instructed and so able as Israel should turn to idolatry. The story reveals the depravity of the human heart. Their hearts were gone was only without foundation. They desired their hearts wanted to do, but used his absence to put in their wicked desires.

Let us be careful lest we be led or indeed, mislead ourselves in creating a God after the image of our own heart and mind. Israel, may be tempted to worship us gods" to which we will be led and worship. It may not be place at this point to warn of a folly which seems to have hold of the church, that of deifying our Christian leaders—man who is called to speak for God is a highly privileged man, of our support and our respect let us remember that he is servant, an instrument in hand, and let us never be worshiping and serving "the creature more than the Creator, blessed forever" (Rom. 1:25).

III. True Worship Defined (John 4:19-24).

One would suppose that a vital and fundamental principle stated in these verses would since have completely saturated the life of the church as well as the individual believer. "God is Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Even in this year of our Lord countless men and women believe that worship has some do with place (vv. 20, 21) or (v. 22) or some other external service or formula. What a pity this should be true when the most precious and delightful way to know God is through personal spiritual communion between God and man. Deadening formalism is the only enemy. There is the preaching of modernism—no all honesty must we not admit even some so-called fundamentalism has in many respects the true spirit of the faith for it rightly contends that the truth of God's Word is modern liberalism. We may be tempted to obscure the word of God by formalism. But we are in danger of a dead orthodoxy as someone said "Clinging to everything except the truth about 13"—or failing to worship in spirit and in truth and out that spirit in loving fellowship with our brethren.

Security

In the heart of every parent lies the hope of a secure future for his family. A comfortable home, future free from financial worry, adequate provision for education—these are the things that he desires above all else.

To make the necessary provisions for this security is not, always the most difficult part of such a program. The Assurance that such provision will continue to provide adequate protection, that it will prove dependable, and that the requirements of his family will always be met, has often proved a greater obstacle to the completion of such plans.

The difficulties involved in such a program are most often overcome by relying upon the services of a good bank. Successful fulfillment of such ambitions in the past through the services of this bank make it the logical place to seek information, to look to for assistance in formulating plans, and for advice. We are always happy to serve in such a capacity.

KLEMMME FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED TO EXTINGUISH FIRE ON FARM

Sheriff Brower And Fire Marshall Investigate Cause Of Blaze

The Klemme Fire Department made a fast run when they were summoned to the A. S. Harris farm about 8 miles southeast of Klemme last Saturday night at 11:00 o'clock. The run to the farm was made in fourteen minutes.

When the fire department arrived at the farm the barn was already consumed by flames, as well as a hay stack and a stack of straw. The house was also afire as a large pile of cobs in the basement were smoldering. Because of the peculiar circumstances of both the house and barn on fire with very little breeze, someone notified Sheriff Brower who soon appeared to conduct an investigation.

From Sheriff Brower we learn that he at once branded the peculiar circumstances as being the work of someone who set the fires.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bahr, who had been working for Mr. Harris, the owner, only a few days, were at Mason City at the time of the fire. Mr. Harris, the owner, was notified by telephone at his home in Alden, Iowa, and arrived at the scene several hours later.

Mr. Bahr stated that when he left the farm that everything was alright, and that he locked the house. The house doors were open when the fire company arrived.

Bill O'Malley, deputy state fire marshal and Sheriff Brower conducted further investigation of the fires Monday, but a telephone conversation with Sheriff Brower revealed that no arrests had been made as yet.

Although handicapped for lack of water, the Klemme fire department saved the house which was on fire, as well as a machine shed and garage which were threatened. The firemen removed all the household goods, and after several hours of hard work were able to kill the cob fire in the basement. Little damage was done to the house, but the barn was a complete loss.

KLEMMME SCHOOL TO HAVE KINDERGARTEN

First Class Will Be Held Monday, Oct. 17; Will Be Held In Afternoon Only

A special kindergarten class to be conducted by Miss Hansen in connection with the other primary work will start Monday, October 17. Children who will be five years of age by the first of January are eligible for this work.

The purpose of the class will be to give the younger children training in preparatory work for the first grade. It will not take the place of the first grade except to lay a ground work that now consumes the first six or eight weeks of the first year.

There are several distinct advantages in having a kindergarten grade preceding the first grade. It will reduce the number of children starting the first grade too young, and it will assure them of being prepared to go into their reading work and other activities at a much earlier date in the first grade.

It is not customary or practical to have children of this age in attendance for a full day, so classes will start for them at one o'clock in the afternoon and continue till three. Parents of children who live in the country will possibly have a little problem of transportation with this time schedule, but it is hoped that the country children as well as those from town will be able to take advantage of this work.

WELL PAINTED HOUSES MAKE KLEMMME ATTRACTIVE TOWN

Klemme is rapidly becoming known as the neatest appearing town in north Iowa. The reason for this is that the citizens of Klemme like to keep their homes and premises neat and orderly.

During the past month or two many homes in Klemme have been repainted and a few noted by our reporter include the following: Wallace Pavey, Grandma Schlawn, Lena Schroeder, Frank Kluckhohn, Art Wellemeyer, Herman Schultdt, Cecil Bridges, Peter Jos-ten and the Mrs. Fred Becker place, now occupied by the Kilgore family. There are perhaps other places that were missed on the tour.

A reader asks where the country's population is most dense. In most cases, we suspect, it is from the neck up.

THADA BUILDS CLEVER MACHINE FOR USE IN FACTORY

Walt Thada and Ed Thompson have completed the building of a clever piece of machinery used in Thada's mouse trap factory.

The machine we refer to was constructed largely from an old washing machine frame and gear assembly and the machine is used to set and spring the traps several times which "limbers" up the mechanism and smoothes the action. The machine will handle about two dozen traps at a time.

Before using the machine, it was necessary to set and spring the traps several times by hand, and when several thousand traps were to be smoothed down in action, this amounted to a great deal of work. Although the machine works perfectly, Mr. Thada plans to make some improvements, such as a self-feeder to carry the traps into the machine one at a time, keeping them moving continuously into the machine so that each trap would then be set and sprung automatically about a dozen times. The finished trap would then come out ready to pack.

Cob Tossers To Stage Big Contest

STATE CORN HUSKING MEET AT RINGSTED, OCTOBER 27

The Frank Fewell farm 1 mile south of Ringsted was named as the site of the 1938 Iowa state corn husking contest by Arthur T. Thompson, associate editor of Wallace's Farmer. The field selected is 65 acres in size and will yield over 80 bushels of hy-brid corn to the acre. The stalks are sturdy and upright and with the high yield assured a new record may be set at the state contest which has been set for Thursday, October 27.

The other two prospective fields, on the Chas. Jacobsen farm four miles east of Ringsted, and the J. C. Gammelgaard farm, 2 1/2 miles west of town, were exceptionally good fields also, stated Mr. Thompson, but parking facilities, highways and many other problems had to be considered and the Fewell farm appeared to be ideally located.

Sixteen huskers will compete in the state meet. Lee Stogill of Morning Sun will defend his title won last year, and the three high men from each of the five district contests will make up the other 15 contestants. Nearly 60 county contests are being staged in Iowa this year with each county winner going to the nearest district meet. This is the largest number of nubbin derbies ever staged in Iowa in any one year, and is expected to create much interest in the state contest at Ringsted. The winner and runner-up from the state meet will enter the national contest at Sioux Falls, S. D., on Nov. 3.

The Ringsted meet will be held during the morning and entertainment presented as results are tabulated during the afternoon.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN THE city of Ogdensburg, N. Y., stands a stately old three-story brick house embowered in a grove of the trees which give Ogdensburg the name of the "Maple City." They call it the "Parrish Mansion" and from its wide verandas look out over the blue waters of the St. Lawrence river.

A surprise awaits you as you enter the house. The walls of its rooms are covered with paintings—stirring, colorful scenes of the Old West: Indians chasing buffalo or attacking stage-coaches and wagon trains; fur traders correlling their boats up the Missouri; galloping cavalrymen charging across the plains or through an Indian village; cowboys roping long-horn steers, "busting" broncos or "shooting up" a one-street frontier cow town.

Here and there stand bronze statues of men and horses vibrant with action. In cases along the

In saying that her arrival in Washington caused a "decided sensation," Ben:Perley was guilty of understatement. Social life under the previous administration of "Old Hickory" Jackson had been inexpressibly crude. It was becoming more refined under the administration of the "Duke of Kinderhook," Martin Van Buren. The coming of a foreigner—and one so beautiful—who had been the toast of princes in Paris would lend it glamor. So Society in Washington welcomed America with open arms.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams became a special friend of the beautiful Italian and even the "god-like" Daniel Webster was not immune to her charms. President Van Buren was so attentive to her that the gossips speculated upon the possibility of the widower-President making her the First Lady of the Land.

It soon became apparent that America wanted something else besides social position. She needed an income. So she drew up a petition to congress asking, first, to be admitted to the rights of citizenship; and second, to be given "a corner of land" out of the public domain, on which to live. Senator Benton presented the petition to the senate and it was immediately referred to the committee on public lands.

The committee's reply eulogized the petitioner as "a young, dignified, and graceful lady, with a mind of the highest intellectual culture, and a heart beating with all of our own enthusiasm in the cause of America and human liberty." Then it went on to give the reasons why the petition could not be granted and commended the lovely Italian to the generosity of the American people—"The name of America—our country's name—should be honored, respected, and cherished in the person of the interesting exile from whose ancestor we derive the great and glorious title."

All of which was very flattering, indeed, but it didn't pay America's bills. She needed money and she resorted to tears to get it. Thereupon, so Ben:Perley tells us, "a subscription was immediately opened by Mr. Haight, the sergeant-at-arms of the senate, and judges, congressmen, and citizens vied with one another in their contributions."

America Returns.

America accepted the subscription gratefully and departed with it for Paris where she went to live with her sister, the Vicomtesse Solen. Washington society heard nothing more of her for two years. It was busy with its own affairs under changing administrations. But some of her friends did not neglect to write to her that under a new administration her petition might now have a better chance of being granted. So she immediately sailed again for the Land of Promise.

When she arrived in Boston, she found that city preparing to give a magnificent ball in celebration of the visit of Prince de Joinville, a younger brother of her lover, the Duc d'Orleans. Accounts differ as to what followed.

John Quincy Adams

Ben:Perley, with his characteristic delicacy, says that "it was whispered that Madame Vespucci had borne an unenviable reputation at Florence and Paris and had been induced by a pecuniary consideration to break off an inconsideration to the Duke of Orleans' timidity with this 'the Prince' and because of this 'the Prince' the Duke d'Orleans refused to recognize her, which virtually excluded her from reputable society."

Later historians, however, tell a different story. For instance, Carl Carmer, in his book, "Listen for a Lonesome Drum," says: "America Vespucci entered the ball-room at Faneuil hall on the arm of the prince himself. Boston saw and worshiped, and all might have gone well with her and her plans had not a guest recognized her as the former mistress of the prince's brother."

At any rate, it meant the end of her social ambitions. All of her snobbish American friends deserted her—all except one. That was John Van Buren, the son of Ex-President Van Buren, a hard-drinking, gambling spendthrift, who was known as "Prince John." Evidently America decided that an American "prince" was better than nothing. So she went to live with him—again without benefit of clergy.

She Comes to Ogdensburg.

It was through her association with John Van Buren that she came at last to Ogdensburg. According to local tradition Van Buren and America met George Parrish, a rich merchant of Ogdensburg, at a hotel in Evans Mills. Van Buren challenged Parrish to a poker game. When he lost all his money, he put up as a final stake his last possession—and lost her, too. So when George Parrish returned to Ogdensburg, America Vespucci accompanied him.

One account says that Parrish was a Belgian; another that he was an Austrian. Whichever he was, he had carried to this country regal ideas. The house to which he brought America was a veritable castle, compared to the humbler Ogdensburg homes.

Of course, "there was talk" among the Puritanical residents of Ogdensburg. They called her a "fancy lady" or the "Florentime Fancy." But she didn't care. All her social ambitions were in the past now. George Parrish gave her every luxury she desired and she was happier than she had ever been before. So for 20 years the "interesting exile" enjoyed an idyllic life in her American castle with her merchant prince.

But, as Carmer records, "it ended with merciful suddenness. . . . One day George Parrish told her he must return to his lands in Europe. He was giving up his holdings in America—and her. She met his decision bravely, thanked him for his settlement of $3,000 a year, told him she would go again to live with her sister, the vicomtesse."

So back to Paris again went America Vespucci and there she remained until her death a few years later. She has become something of a legend in Ogdensburg, albeit one of the most interesting in that interesting little city. The relics of this exotic foreigner strike a strange note in an art museum which perpetuates the memory of an artist so thoroughly and distinctly American as Frederic Remington was. However, as Carl Carmer says, "If in some ghostly state she has found a way to return across the ocean to her American home, I know she must be puzzled by all the rearing bronze bronchos, and the paintings of cowboys galloping over the endless yellow desert. But I am quite sure she is not afraid."

The paradox of the Ogdensburg museum housing relics of two such widely different characters as the American painter and the Italian adventuress is no stranger, however, than the paradox which gave the name of her ancestor to a continent which he did not discover. For while history gives credit to Christopher Columbus for discovering the two continents in the New world, neither of them bears the appropriate name of "Columbia." Instead, both are named for an Italian explorer who never set foot on the soil of North America and did not visit South America until several years after Columbus had. He was Amerigo, or Americus, Vespucci, born in Florence, Italy, in March, 1452, who grew up to become a merchant engaged in trade for the Florentine house of the Medici.

When Columbus in 1498 made his third voyage across the Atlantic and reached the mainland of South America, he sent back to Spain five ships laden with pearls and with them a chart of the new discoveries of this mainland and its rich pearl fisheries. Bishop Fonseca, who was in charge of all matters relating to the new discoveries, showed Columbus' chart to a certain Alonso de Hojeda and gave him a license to go to South America to exploit its riches. With Hojeda sailed the merchant, Vespucci, who, incidentally, had supplied provisions for Columbus' two previous voyages.

The Hojeda-Vespucci expedition left Cadiz, Spain, in May, 1499, and landed on the coast of South America 200 leagues south of the Gulf of Paria, the center of the pearl fishing industry.

Towards the close of 1500 Vespucci was induced to transfer his services to the king of Portugal, who, in 1501 sent him to explore farther this new southern continent. Vespucci's three ships, crossing from Cape Verde, reached Cape St. Roque August 17 and proceeding southward, arrived at Bahia on November 1, and at Rio de Janeiro January 1, 1502. They appear to have advanced as far south as latitude 32 degrees, although Vespucci maintains that they actually proceeded a good deal farther.

Two accounts of these voyages were shortly afterwards issued by Vespucci. In the first he gave an account to his fellow-countryman, Lorenzo Pietro de Medici, of these new regions he had visited which "we may rightly call a new world." His second account, sent to the same person, he entitled "Mundus Novus." In it he describes how in these southern parts they had "found a continent more densely peopled than Europe, Asia or Africa. We knew that land to be a continent and not an island both because of its long extension of coast and because of its many inhabitants."

In 1504 Amerigo published a second account in the form of an Italian plaque addressed to Piero Soderini, gonfalonier of Florence, who had been a schoolfellow of his, wherein his two voyages are expanded into four. It has not been difficult, however, to note the many discrepancies in this account and to bring the details back to the two voyages.

These booklets had a tremendous vogue, and when compared with the labored attempt of Columbus to describe the site of the "Garden of Eden" and the "Earthly Paradise," showed a much greater sense of what the public understood. It is not at all surprising, therefore, to understand what took place in 1507.

It so happened that at St. Die in the Vosges mountains of France there was a little collegiate institution which was both a center of geographical learning and the owner of a new printing press, which was then something of a novelty in France. Two of its faculty members, Mathias Ringman and Martin Waldseemuller, were busy with a new edition of Ptolemy's "Geographia." Before publishing it, however, they printed an essay called "Cosmographie Introductio" or an "Introductory Geography," to which they added Vespucci's letter. In this essay, published in May, 1507, Waldseemuller wrote "And the fourth part of the world having been discovered by Americus, it may be called Amerigo, that is, the land of Americus, or America." The name came into general use, being applied first to the southern continent, and later to both continents.

PASSING JUDGMENT

... on others can often get us into "hot water" when we do not know all the circumstances.

By WINIFRED WILLARD

MAN, orange and bunch of boys on the lower East Side of New York. The man tossed the orange to see the boys scramble for it. One chap, about 10, fought like a young tiger, tooth and nail, eyes flashing, face grim, fists hitting furiously—all for an orange. The man who had tossed it told his wife at home: "I saw the meanest boy in the world this morning. Didn't care for anybody or anything except to hog an orange himself."

Business took that man later the same day to a pitifully poor room. On a cot in the corner a little girl's cheeks flamed with fever and her body was wasted with suffering. The door flew open. In bolted that little chap, the "meanest boy in the world." Breathless with running, he tiptoed up to his sister's bed and whispered excitedly, "Here's an orange I brought ye, Sis; fought for it 'cause I thought ye'd like it." How her eyes sparkled! Tiny hands reached eagerly for it. Parched little lips craved the refreshment it offered.

The man went home, sat long slumped in his chair. Then he called his wife and with shame and regret struggling in his voice blurted out: "You've married the meanest man that ever lived. That little shaver I told you about, the one I said was the meanest boy in the world, fought for my orange to take to his sick sister and I'm lookin' for somebody to kick me round the block!" He didn't know the whole story before he sat in judgment; that's all.

Flimsy Evidence

A big bishop spoke rather caustically and disparagingly about a woman in public life who traveled the nation and who had an exceptional salary. "Why doesn't she wear better clothes?" he asked, "same old things season in and out; that hat certainly's been on the road winter and summer two solid years." It had. She knew it better than the bishop. But he just didn't know that her money was spent instead for nurses and comforts for her sick father whom she adored. What did a new hat matter if father needed what the cost of a hat could provide? Just judging on flimsy evidence!

For months two people dodged each other. Each knew the other was haughty, unapproachable, cold and undesirable. Finally they met. Didn't want to; tried to avoid it and couldn't. Almost at once barriers began to fall. From the dislike of misunderstanding, they got proper appraisals of each other; to their surprised satisfaction, each began to enjoy, then to admire the other. For the first time they saw behind the scenes and found only what was good. Nearly always so!

Case of the Railroad Man

It seemed strange that the man who lived in Washington breakfasted ungodly early, walked four long blocks, took a street car across city, then rode the tiresome train every day to his Baltimore office. We could all have told him how much shorter, simpler and more sensible for him to step into the bus in front of his house and out at his office; most anybody would know enough to do it this easier, quicker way. Then we learned that he is of the railroad staff and it is his professional responsibility to take the train. Buses weren't his line. Trains were! We sat in judgment without knowing what we were talking about.

So easy to turn our imaginations loose on any pretext or person; so easy to see what isn't there; to misunderstand and misinterpret; to see the little lad fighting for an orange for his sick sister as "meanest boy in the world"; so easy to be critical instead of kind; to tangle human threads that need straightening, not snarling, and thus to spoil many a lovely pattern of life.

A world of saving wisdom abides in the old philosophy that reveals "there's so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it scarcely behooves any of us to say things against the rest of us." Just another way of suggesting that it's better all around to "judge not." It keeps things from boomeranging on us!

Palms in Coat of Arms

The palm is in the coat of arms of South Carolina. Legends have it that the Virgin Mary commanded the palm to bend its leaves over Christ during the trip into Egypt. Palms were known to have supplied tribes not only with food, but also oil, fuel and shelter. One of the superstitions pertaining to palms, notes a writer in the Rural New Yorker, is that if one would make a cross of leaves he would be free from injury during a heavy storm. People in some sections of the country believe that it will drive mice away from granaries; that if leaves are eaten it will cure fever, or that if a palm leaf is put behind the picture of Virgin Mary on Easter morning it will drive away all animals.

Practical and Pretty At-Home Wearables

YOU'LL be indoors more from now on—busy at your own fireside. So it's time to make yourself some pretty new work clothes. Here are some that combine comfort and practicality, and they are so easy to make that even if this is your first sewing venture, you'll succeed beautifully.

Slenderizing House Dress.

Everything about this dress is designed for working comfort. The waistline, although it looks slim because it's drawn in by darts, is unhampering and easy. The skirt gives enough leeway to stoop and climb and stretch. The armholes are ample, the sleeves short and loose. This dress is easy to do up, too, because it fastens in the front, and can be laid out flat on the board. Its utter simplicity, long lines and deep v-neck make you look slimmer than you are. Make it of calico, percale, linen or gingham.

Three Pretty Aprons.

Any of the three of them will be mighty handy to have all fresh and ready, when you want to prepare afternoon tea or a hasty pick-up supper for unexpected guests. Each of them protects the front of you efficiently, and looks so crisp, feminine and attractive. Make several sets—you'll want some for yourself, and also to put away for gifts. They're so pretty for bridge prizes, and for engagement remembrances. Choose batiste, dotted Swiss, lawn or dimity.

The Patterns.

1615 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4 1/4 yards of 35-inch material. Contrasting cuffs would take 1/2 yard.

1595 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 38 requires, for apron No. 1, 1 1/2 yards of 35-inch material and 6 yards of ricrac braid; for apron No. 2, 1 1/2 yards of 35-inch material with 5/8 yards braid; for apron No. 3, 1 1/2 yards of 35-inch material, with 11 yards of braid.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Sheepskins Trapped Gold

Today, with gold booming as never before, man is seeking feverishly to crown the labors of 6,000 years of persistent gold prospecting. The early prospectors netted the beds of alluvial streams with sheep skins, weighing them down with boulders, and thus catching in the wool quantities of gold dust as the current bore it downstream.

Just to call your attention to the fact that this week is designated as "Fire Prevention Week." This is a good time to take stock of any existing fire hazards on your premises and clean them up. Look over your heating equipment for flaws; perhaps a new smoke pipe is needed or repairs are needed to make the furnace safe. Then look over your chimney, and be sure to make a thorough inspection of the chimney below the roof line as that is where many fires start. Rubbish should be cleaned up both around your house and other buildings and in the yards. Inspect electrical connections, lamp cords, plugs, etc. which may show wear and need replacing.

When everything has been looked over carefully then I suggest you see your insurance agent and take out a fire insurance policy to cover any possible loss you might suffer from fire.

IF YOU DRINK—DON'T DRIVE

If you drink—don't drive; if you drive, don't drink!

You don't have to be completely drunk to be a dangerous driver.

Reports show that many accidents—and some of them fatal accidents—are caused in many instances by drivers who were not drunk, but had been drinking just enough to slow them up.

Their reactions were delayed. Their judgment wasn't good.

Famous last words are: "I'm still sober enough to drive."

Don't let those be your last words!

I-S-A-S

'Tis said that fools will go Where angels fear to tread— But fools who speed Are going to need Their angels harps instead.

I-S-A-S

HOW FAST IS TOO FAST? When you are driving, a safe rule to follow is to be sure that you can always stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

When accidents do happen, the higher the speed at which the cars were going, the worse the accident.

At 20 miles an hour, one accident in 61 is fatal.

Between 30 and 40 miles an hour, one accident in 35 is fatal.

And at 50 miles an hour and up, someone is killed in one out of every 11 accidents.

MISTAKES

When a plumber makes a mistake he charges for it.

When a lawyer makes a mistake, it means more business.

When a doctor makes a mistake, he buries it.

When a judge makes a mistake, it becomes a law.

But when an editor makes a mistake, good night!

A REAL ATTRACTION The other day I was discussing the safety problem with a friend. Suddenly he grew confidential and began unloading his "home" troubles. Freshman Initiation

The freshmen were initiated into the high school last Thursday, Oct. 6. They were dressed to represent various countries, such as Germany, France and other countries. In the morning the freshmen gave a short program before the rest of the high school. The "All Nations' Band", under the leadership of Adolf Hitler (Homer Blickenderfer) provided several numbers and accompanied several singers. The freshmen went into all the grade rooms and performed a few numbers.

At noon the sophomores took the freshmen up-town and made them play several numbers on the main street.

In the evening a party was held in the school gymnasium. All of the faculty members and the school janitor, Mr. Montgomery, were invited, besides the Freshmen and sophomores. The freshmen performed several acts on the stage during the early part of the evening. Later, games, under the direction of Maxine Stokesbary, were played. A lunch was served at the close of the evening by the sophomore class.

—K H S—

Friday morning, Mr. Galbreth presented a review of the current problems of the last two weeks before the members of the high school. One morning each week will be devoted to either a test or talk about the news of the world, as found in the newspapers and radio broadcasts.

GRADES 1 & 2

We have some new story books in our library. On Thursday we made Jack-o-lantern posters.

The first graders have been writing story charts about animals. They are making a scrap book about animals, too.

We made our Topsy Turvy doll this week. She has four pig-tails, each tied with a different colored ribbon just like the doll in the story.

The second graders played a story for the first graders on Wednesday.

GRADES 3 & 4

Maralee Ridder and Harley Barz visited school Wednesday afternoon. Monday afternoon we had a peanut shower for Miss Potter. It was a surprise shower.

We have some new library books. The names of them are "And to think I saw it on Mulberry Street", "The Restless Robin", "Chessie and her Kittens", "The Polar Bear Twins", "Tommy Thatcher Goes to Sea", and "High Water".

Miss Potter is reading us a book named "Chi-Wee". It is a story about a little Indian girl. William Montgomery brought a pepper plant to school.

GRADES 5 & 6

Mary Lou Netland and Ewald Grosshuesch—reporters.

Herbert Mueller and Carol Bock are traffic cops this week.

We have organized a court in our room to try persons who have not behaved. The judges are Junior, Edward, Wesley, Ronald and Ruth. The other boys and girls act as a jury. Ewald takes charge of the court, because he is president of our room. Duard and Harlan have been tried in court this week.

Edward and Mavis were the only people who had perfect scores in spelling this week.

Miss Irvine is reading another book called, "In Quest of Runaways".

We got some new story and reference books for our room.

GRADES 7 & 8

Betty Etchen and Larry Van Syoc—reporters.

We took our first self-testing drill in arithmetic this week. The eighth grade got a score of nine which is a good score. Billy Grosshuesch is the only one who got a star score, which is a perfect score. The seventh grade received a score of four and one-half, an average score.

In the seventh grade we are reading the "Courtship of Miles Standish". We also wrote letters to friends. In arithmetic we have been working on bar graphs.

We have six new books to add to our library. Betty Etchen is our librarian for the next two weeks.

Rug From Old Co

By RUTH WYETH SPEAR
THE directions for making a rug in my book—SEWING the Home Decorator—brought many letters from readers describing rugs that are to me and very interesting reader who shares with idea for using pieces of woolen and scraps of felt, her rug to the side of the and took a snapshot of it she sent me.

(1) is made of the back of a very heavy old coat. The rug was made for a heavy weight to the edge. The rug may be pieced if a large piece of heavy cloth is not available or felt purchased by the yard may be used for it.

Next, circles of felt in colors, cut from old hats and discarded school pennants, are gathered together with heavy black thread as at A. These are then in place as at B beginning at the center of the foundation. Large circles in the three rows are two inches in diameter. Those in the next two rows are 2 1/2 inches. All the small circles are one inch.

You can make slipcovers for types of curtains and many things for the house with the of Book 1—SEWING for the Decorator. Just follow the pictures. Step by step you can make the lovely things you have been wanting for your home.

Direction of Tornado

The United States weather bureau says: "While the normal direction of a tornado path is southwest to northeast the numerous instances of tornadoes traveling in other directions have been known to move westward, or even southwestward, reverse of the normal direction. Tornadoes often occur in lines and one tornado may have numerous pendent clouds. For example, six funnels were observed in the Wichita county, Kansas, on June 19, 1934, and many as 15 funnels have been reported at one time. Each of which reached the ground and result in tornadic damage."

Fashion Embarks on Wild Color Career in Fall Garb

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

ON is about to go on a great spree. For that matter the colors have already started a mad color career that is to outcolor even the most seen for many a year. That this color orgy writes the simple black foundation that provides such dramatic for accessories that splash in vivid highlights. No black dress with dashes is holding its own. A striking thing about the color of this season is that they are not out of the ordinary. Colors heard most about and dramatized throughout Paris are the purples and the mauves and violets and shades. In fact the entire of volume shades is run next in the limelight the talked of teal blue and fog that rapturous blue made in the ever-beloved Blue Boy painting. In fact, we are in a season of "blues" that are lovely beyond de-it of refined elegance which is pictured to the right in the made of an imported wool exquisite scarab blue tone. It is with sheared beaver, a which is very much in use this bows tie at the collar and which is significant for much is given to tie-fastenings out current costume design. The bands of shirred, match-are set into the top part of the dress underneath. A shade that is making special appeal with American women. There are also a number of fascinating greens in the present fashion spectrum, notably bronze, hunter, laurel and tapestry greens. Autumn rust and coppery tones are also going big.

Coats are yielding to color to a surprising degree. Leading stores are devoting entire window displays to coats in purples and deep plum or wine-dreg tones. These are superbly colorful and with opulent furs present about the handsomest array of coats ere seen.

As to the gorgeous plaid or striped wool coats so outstanding in the new fashion picture, the only way to resist them is to close your eyes and flee their color glory. Better still, why not make up your mind to indulge in a richly colorful plaid or striped (fashion favors both) wool coat at the very start. The striped coat centered in the group above reflects rich autumnal colors that take on an added note of luxury in a trim of luxuriant fur.

The swank jacket suit pictured to the left abounds in color intrigue. The color formula adopted is blue spruce and dark brown. The dress, the trimming on the coat and the hat are of lightweight woolen in the subtle blue spruce. The short swag-ger coat is brown in a new deep pile wool that looks velvety and soft. The velvety wool weaves are among the smartest shown this season and fashion is placing considerable emphasis on them.

Drape Technique

Much of costume design in the new fall fashions is based on a draped technique that is designed to slenderize the figure. WEAK EGG SHELLS LACK VITAMIN D

Requirements of Birds Are Of Great Importance.

By Prof. C. S. Platt, Associate Poultry Husbandman, Rutgers University WNU Service

A lack of sufficient vitamin D in rations for laying flocks can be determined far more readily by egg shell quality than in the number of eggs produced. Egg shells become weak before production is in any way impaired when vitamin D is deficient. With an adequate supply of the vitamin, the number of cracked and weak-shelled eggs produced in a day should not exceed 3 per cent. This means that with a collection of 400 eggs daily, there should not be more than about one dozen cracked or weak-shelled eggs. If the number exceeds this, the indications are that the vitamin D requirements of the birds are not being properly met.

To correct this condition, the cod liver oil content of the ration should be increased. Normally, the use of 2 per cent of a high grade, natural cod liver oil in the mash will provide a sufficient amount of the vitamin for good results. If this amount is being used and the number of cracked eggs still exceeds 3 per cent, it is possible that the quality of the oil is not up to standard.

Egg production alone is not a very good criterion of the needs of the birds for vitamin D, because under most conditions the birds obtain a sufficient amount through the ordinary open windows of a poultry house to meet their requirements for egg production.

Most Fires on Farms From Common Causes

Farm fires in the United States take about 3,500 lives and destroy $100,000,000 worth of property each year, says a recent United States department of agriculture publication, "Fires on Farms."

Eighty-five per cent of this loss is from such commonplace causes as defective chimneys and flues; sparks on combustible roofs; lightning; spontaneous combustion; careless use of matches, smoking; careless use of gasoline and kerosene; defective and improperly installed stoves and furnaces; faulty wiring; and misuse of electric appliances.

Four simple precautions that the author, Harry E. Roethe, of the bureau of chemistry and soils, gives to reduce needless waste caused by farm fires are: Use fire-resistant roofing, dispose of waste and rubbish, never use gasoline or kerosene to start or revive a fire, and, guard against overheating of stoves and furnaces and clean smoke pipes at least once a year. He also suggests that major buildings be equipped with lightning rods.

In addition to removing the fire hazards, Roethe suggests preparations to fight a fire should one occur, that is, fire-fighting equipment on every farm, kept in a handy place ready for instant use.

Many Eggs Do Not Hatch

About 300,000,000 good eggs a year, which would be enough to feed thousands of persons, are wasted every year because they will not hatch. Most of these can be saved in edible condition, according to the claims, by a device recently patented which will detect whether an incubated egg will produce a chicken or not before it has a chance to spoil. It is claimed that from 15 to 20 per cent of all the eggs set annually in the United States never hatch.

Lesson for October 16

REVERENCE FOR GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:7; Matthew 5:33-37, 12:33-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.—Matthew 6:9

Character reveals itself through the words and deeds of a man. He may try to conceal his real spiritual condition and may assume an outward appearance of piety but he need not say many words, nor meet many of life's problems, before his true condition is revealed.

Our lesson for today touches primarily on the matter of the words of men, presenting first God's command that in speaking we are to show reverence for His name, and then leading up to the expression of that reverence in abstinence from swearing and from idle talk.

I. Reverence Commanded (Exod. 20:7).

The forbidden thing is the taking of the name of the Lord "in vain." Our use of the word "vain" carries the meaning of "useless, without purpose or meaning." This is part of what is in mind in this commandment, for the name of Jehovah is sacred and is to be revered as standing for the eternal God. It is never to be used carelessly, or for a frivolous purpose. All too often we tell jokes or stories which have no real purpose or meaning except to elicit a laugh and in them we use the name of God. We all need to exercise care at that point.

The Hebrew word translated "vain" has the additional meaning of "evil" and "falsehood." Men are so bold that they may even use the name of God to support themselves in a lie. God hears and will in no wise hold them guiltless.

II. Swearing Forbidden (Matt. 5:33-37).

The Sermon on the Mount (so-called), from which this portion of Scripture is taken, is difficult to interpret to the satisfaction of all. Some disregard its evident application to the kingdom and, attempting to apply it in the midst of an ungodly generation, fall into such inconsistency that they abandon the effort and regard the teaching of the passage as impossible idealism. Others, who rightly interpret the passage as presenting the laws and principles of life in the kingdom of God when it shall be fully set up on earth with Jesus as King, fail to make any application of those principles to the life of those who are now living in this world—though not of it—but rather have their citizenship in heaven. This is also an unfortunate error.

We who follow the Lord Jesus are not to swear by either things sacred or things that might be called secular. Perhaps He has in mind that our lives should be so true that men will not need to have any kind of an oath to be assured of our sincerity and honesty. Some believe that all oaths even in court are forbidden, while others, with due respect for the feelings of those who hold this view, regard the taking of oaths in official matters as not being in mind. All would agree that the careless and almost sacrilegious use of God's name in administering oaths would be taking His name in vain.

Swearing is also entirely beyond the pale with Christian men and women. It is all too common with both men and women. A great church has organized a "Holy Name Society" to keep its members from using the name of the Lord in profanity. What a telling comment on the times in which we live!

III. Judgment Assured (Matt. 12:33-37).

Jesus had cast out a demon who had possessed a man and made him blind and dumb. The Pharisees could not deny the miracle but attributed it to the power of Beelzebub, prince of the demons. Jesus closed their mouths by pointing out that Satan did not work against himself, and went on to speak solemn words regarding their and our responsibility for what we say.

A day of judgment is coming, when we shall answer for the idle and wicked words which we speak. While we would not bring condemnation upon those who indulge in the innocent pleasantries of life by making too severe an application of these words, neither should we destroy their evident import by failing to apply them to our daily conversation. One need but listen to the casual small talk of men and women in public places to realize that we need to give attention to the matter of elevating not only the conversation of others but our own as well to a nobler and more helpful level. Surely Christians should speak for the glory of God on every occasion and in each circumstance of life.

The way to accomplish this worthy purpose, and the only way, is to have the heart and life filled with the good treasure of God's Word, or verily out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. What to your words and mine, indicate to yours regarding what is in our hearts?

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Relates the Romance of Wheat and Discusses Flour, the Basic Food

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THE story of wheat flour is the story of civilization. Before man learned to cultivate this golden grain, he was obliged to move from place to place, with the seasons, in search of food to sustain and nourish his body.

Then, on one happy and momentous occasion, perhaps 6,000 years ago, an inspired nomad plucked the kernels clustered at the top of some waving grasses, observed that they had a nut-like taste, and passed along the far-reaching discovery to his fellow-tribesmen.

The beginnings of wheat cultivation are lost in antiquity. But we do know that for thousands of years, it has been one of the most important crops in the world—so necessary to man's well being that the supposition, "Give us this day our daily bread," has summed up his most fervent desires.

Food for the World

Today, nearly three quarters of a billion people use wheat as food. And modern methods of milling have developed flours of such superlative quality that breads are more appetizing and more attractive than ever before; special flours make cakes and pastries light as the proverbial feather; and there are prepared mixes available for biscuits, waffles, muffins, griddle cakes, pie crust and gingerbread.

For Energy and Vitality

The form in which wheat flour makes its appearance on the table is of less importance than the fact that it is and should be an essential item in the family food supply. That is because it offers a rich supply of fuel value at little cost. The different types of flour contain from 61 to 76 per cent carbohydrates, from 11 to 15 per cent protein, and varying amounts of mineral salts and vitamins.

It is necessary to know something of the structure of the wheat kernel and to understand how the various flours differ, in order to select the flour best suited for each purpose. A kernel is made up of several outer layers of bran; a layer of cells high in phosphorus and protein, just inside the bran; the endosperm, composed of cells in which starch granules are held together by proteins; and the germ. The starch cells are so small that one kernel of wheat may contain as many as 20,000,000 granules.

White and Whole Wheat Flours

White flour is made chiefly from the endosperm. Whole-wheat, entire-wheat and graham flours are loosely applied terms which refer both to products made by grinding the wheat berry without the removal or addition of any ingredient, and also to a flour from which part of the bran has been removed or to which bran has been added.

One of the most prolonged discussions of the last two decades has involved arguments for and against the use of white or whole wheat flour in making various types of bread and muffins. As a result, many people have been confused and misled—often at the expense of their enjoyment in meals.

Here are the facts: White bread contains important energy values, proteins, some minerals, chiefly potassium and phosphorus, and when made with milk, it also supplies some calcium. It is easily and almost completely digested, tests indicating an average digestibility of 96 per cent.

Bread and other bakery products made from whole wheat flour also contain proteins and carbohydrates, plus good amounts of iron, copper, phosphorus and potassium; and vitamins A, B and G.

The whole grain products are less completely digested than those which are highly refined, however, so some of their nutrients may be lost to the body.

When the two types of flour are considered as sources of protein and energy alone, they are regarded by nutritionists as practically interchangeable. Whole wheat flour is conceded to be richer in minerals and vitamins, but where white bread is preferred, these elements easily can be supplied from other sources.

As a matter of fact, foods made from both types of flour belong in the well-balanced diet, where they add variety and splendid food values at minimum cost. And it goes without saying that for many purposes, only white flour is suitable.

Bread Versus Pastry Flour

Different types of wheat differ in their proportions of protein and carbohydrates, and that accounts for the difference between bread and pastry flours. Bread flour is made from wheat containing a large amount of gluten, which gives elasticity to a dough and helps to make a well-puffed loaf. Pastry flour contains less gluten and more starch and has a lighter texture that produces fine-grained cakes. All-purpose flours, as their name implies, are usually a blend of different types of wheat and are designed for general household use.

A Symbol of Progress

It is a tribute to American enterprise that the world's largest flour mills are now to be found in this country, and that tremendous staffs of technicians and research chemists supervise every step in the preparation of the flour which may pass through as many as 17 grindings and be subjected to 180 separations.

Experts begin by checking the quality of the grain while it is in transit to the mill. But their work does not end when the flour emerges pure white in color and unbelievably fine in texture, after having passed through silk bolting cloths of 100 mesh or finer. After that, there are baking tests, day after day, to be sure that every sack which is sold is of uniformly high quality.

Self-Rising Flours

An interesting development of recent years has been the self-rising flours and other ready-to-use mixtures. Some of these contain only a leavener; others include dried milk and eggs; fat; and baking powder, so that only a liquid is needed. All are planned to save the homemaker's time and maintain her family's interest in their most important energy food—the products of wheat—the foremost cereal grain.

Questions Answered

Mrs. F. B. L.—Flour should be stored in a moderately cool, dry, well ventilated place, and should be protected from vermin and insects. It should not be exposed to excessive heat, nor to freezing temperatures.

Miss F. B.—You are right! Rye flour is next to wheat in popularity, though it is usually mixed with wheat in making bread. Flours or meals are also made from potatoes, bananas, soy beans, lima beans, buckwheat, barley and rice, though the percentage is small compared to the amount made from wheat.

Siege of "Lost Battalion" Was World War's Supreme Hero Story

Say the Authors of a Recently-Published Book in Which Is Given for the First Time the Complete and Authentic Chronicle of This "Unique, Poignant Episode Whose Luster Has Been Dimmed by a Tarnish of Mystery and Sensational Rumor."

© Western Newspaper Union.

ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON THE afternoon of October 8, 1918, a party of 194 American soldiers, ragged, haggard, some of them trembling with weakness but keeping in formation, led by a major and a captain, tramped wearily across Charlevaux valley in the Argonne Forest in France. They were marching to the rear, to brigade reserve and rest.

"From beyond La Palette, the raw wind brought a faint rattling sound, and above their heads came the whipping and snapping of machine-gun bullets, almost spent—the enemy's last groping finger-tips. Those who were left of the Lost Battalion did not even turn their heads; they looked neither to the right nor left. One, who saw them pass, remembers today their eyes. 'When I looked into those eyes, there was nothing I could say to them.'"

Such is the graphic description of the climax of one of the most dramatic incidents in American history, as given in the book "The Lost Battalion," written by Thomas M. Johnson and Fletcher Pratt and published recently by the Bobbs-Merrill company. "The siege of the Lost Battalion endures after 20 years as the supreme American hero-story of the World War," says the foreword to this book. "Yet this unique, poignant episode has had no complete chronicle, and its luster has been dimmed by a tarnish of mystery and sensational rumor. To get and tell the full truth, we have joined forces: a sometime war correspondent who reported the episode at the time, albeit under censorship, and an historian who has specialized in military history."

In order to make their book a complete and authoritative account of this epic event, the authors did a thorough and painstaking job of research. They consulted all the army records and dispatches bearing upon the incident. Although the 100-odd survivors of the Lost Battalion are scattered all over the country they interviewed in person or by letter as many of these as possible. They examined diaries and letters written at the time and checked the Reichsarchiv in Potsdam to get the German side of the story.

Dispelling the Myths.

Out of all their research has emerged a story "far different from, and in many ways much

CAPT. GEORGE G. McMURTRY
Second-in-command of the "Lost Battalion" more creditable to those participating than, the legend which has grown so profusely about it."

The epic of the Lost Battalion had its origins in an order issued by Maj.-Gen. Robert Alexander of the Seventy-seventh division at the beginning of its drive against the Germans in the Argonne late in September. That order read:

"Ground once captured must be held under no circumstances be given up in absence of direct, positive and formal orders to do so emanating from these headquarters. Troops occupying ground must be supported against counter-attack, and all gains held. It is a favorite trick of the Boche to spread confusion among our troops by calling out 'Retire!' or 'Fall back!' If, in any action, any such command is heard, officers and men may be certain that it is given by an enemy. Whoever gives such a command is a traitor, and it is the duty of any officer or man loyal to his country, who hears such an order, to shoot the offender upon the spot. WE ARE NOT GOING BACK, BUT FORWARD!"

Remembering that order, Charles W. Whittlesey, major in command of the First battalion of the Three Hundred Eight infantry of the Seventy-seventh division, had no thought of retreat when, on the morning of October 3, he found his command caught in a "pocket," a ravine a mile or so northeast of Binerville.

Twice during the division's drive, which began on October 2, he had protested against making the attack that would put his command in the dreaded "pocket," but he was overruled by his superior officers. His orders were to drive on "without regard to flanks or losses." So he felt that he had no choice but to obey.

He Obeyed Orders.

Despite the encircling movement of the Germans, Whittlesey knew on the morning of October 3 that he could get his men safely back to the main army, but he decided to hold his position. Later regular army officers, trying to gloss over the episode, blamed Whittlesey for too much zeal and for not withdrawing.

The result was the five-day siege in which Whittlesey's force, steadily reduced in numbers until only 194 of the 554 men who went into the "pocket" came out of it, beat off the assaults of the Germans—by infantry attack, by trench mortar bombs, hand grenades, and machine gun fire, by sniping rifle fire from the front, flank and rear and finally by flame-throwers. The Americans dug fox-holes among the trees along the slope of the valley and hung on desperately—short of rations, without enough water and with no surgeons to care for their wounds.

According to the testimony of most of the survivors, a 3½-hour period of the second day of the siege was the worst of all. At noon on October 4 there was a lull in the German firing. Whittlesey's men crawled out of their funk-holes and sat around, wishing for something to eat. Suddenly there was a violent explosion, then two more and then three in quick succession. They were shellbursts, shells coming from the south where the American artillery divisions lay. Their preliminary warning screeches were distinctly the Franco-American 75s, not the German 77s. The line of fire methodically moved forward and then concentrated squarely on the place where the battalion lay.

The "Friendly Barrage."

Whittlesey scribbled a message: "We are along the road parallel 276.4. Our own artillery is dropping a barrage directly on us. For heaven's sake, stop it." us. For heaven's sake, the French Commander Richards, the French Canadian pigeon man, nervously nadiated pigeon to the leg clipped the message to the leg of the last pigeon, Cher Ami, and tossed the bird in the air, starting it on the hazardous journey back to Corporal George Gault who was in charge of the Seventy-seventh division's pigeon loft.

seventh division's pigeon loft.

Cher Ami, its breast-bone shattered and a leg and an eye missing, arrived at the headquarters loft shortly before four o'clock. By that time the bombardment had ceased, but the damage already had been done. Whittlesey found that 80 of his men had been killed or wounded in the "friendly barrage."

Later in the afternoon, the Germans captured several of the command, including two lieutenants, Leak and Harrington. Left alone for a few minutes, the prisoners fabricated a tale that probably saved the Lost Battalion from complete extinction. Each man, cross-examined in turn, gave the same answers to the enemy questioners: that the beleaguered American battalion consisted of 1,500 men well equipped with ammunition and food. Those inspired lies, the authors say, kept the Germans from making a concerted attack on the pitifully weak garrison.

During the next two days the men of the isolated group were agonized by the sight of Allied airplanes flying over the ravine and dropping packets of food, cartridges and first aid supplies into the German lines. Besides not having the proper co-ordinates, the pilots were misled by the American panel signals which were set out by the wily Germans. The drinking water situation also was desperate.

The morning of October 7 Whittlesey noticed that the morale of his men was breaking down. The runners he had sent back for relief apparently had been captured or killed.

"There was a shortage of writing materials, particularly of paper. A few men wrote final messages to loved ones on scraps of bandage or pieces of shirttail whacked off with pocket knives, with blood for ink, not in a gesture of melodrama, but out of necessity."

A Demand for Surrender.

Later in the afternoon the crumbling morale was revived when the German letter asking immediate surrender was received. Lowell R. Hollingshead, 18-year-old private who had been captured by the Germans, bore the letter back to Major Whittlesey.

The popular legend has Major Whittlesey shouting "Go to hell!" to the enemy. Major Whittlesey's story is that there were no Germans near for him to shout that to, so he just folded up the letter, put it in his pocket and said to Hollingshead, "Go back to your post." In his written report the major said simply, "No reply seemed necessary."

One effect of the letter was to infuriate the Americans so that for two days more they valiantly held out until finally on the night of October 7 several volunteer runners got through to the 154th brigade and the First battalion of the 307th Infantry, led by Major McKinney, smashed through the German lines and reached the "pocket." The Lost Battalion was saved.

In regard to the "go-to-hell" legend, the authors of "The Lost Battalion" say:

"Major Whittlesey never said 'Go to hell!' if only because there was no German present to whom to say it. But, German and all, the myth has been perpetuated by a colorful artist's painting, and even by a fake photograph allegedly snapped by one of the Lost Battalion."

"The myth probably originated in the headquarters of the Seventy-seventh division. Thence someone sent an official report giving the text of Lieutenant Prinz's surrender letter and the concluding line: 'The reply to the above was "go to hell!" back to Lieut. E. Kidder Meade at First Corps headquarters."

"A day or two later, on a visit to the Seventy-seventh division headquarters, the co-author of this volume, Thomas M. Johnson, asked General Alexander,

"What did Whittlesey tell 'em?"

"What WOULD he tell 'em?" General Alexander retorted. "He told 'em to go to hell."

"Shortly afterward, Mr. Johnson asked Major Whittlesey the same question. The major replied:

"We told them nothing."

"He and Captain McMurry wrote into their official report that: 'No reply seemed necessary.'"

"But typewriter, cable and linotype—to say nothing of headline writer—had done their work; millions of Americans were throwing down their newspapers to give three rousing cheers for 'Go-to-hell Whittlesey' and the 'Lost Battalion' that had not lost its nerve. Whoever invented that story was a genius at wartime propaganda. He could have put into the mouth of the New England lawyer no words that would more endear him and his men to average Americans—or more inflame their war spirit."

In this hero worship, according to Johnson and Pratt, lay the main reasons which caused Whittlesey later to commit suicide. They write:

"His whole position, on being demobilized, was a painful one. He was naturally a rather modest and retiring individual; naturally he had always been acutely uncomfortable in the presence of anything that savored of personal publicity or personal display. He had an acute sympathy with the forgotten man and wanted to be one himself. . . . Now that the fighting was over he wanted nothing so much as to revert to his previous status, to sink into the crowd and bury himself in his legal work.

BRIG. GEN. ROBERT ALEXANDER

"But he was not permitted to revert. He had been named by Pershing himself as one of the 'three outstanding heroes of the A. E. F.' and he was the only one resident in New York and instantly available for all kinds of speeches and ceremonies. His office became a rendezvous for job-hunting ex-soldiers—'Not a day but I hear from some of them' he said once. He was not a private citizen, but an exhibition piece, a plush horse."

"A plush horse constantly on exhibition in circles where a word about his real convictions on war as a bloody and unnecessary business (which do not appear to have changed) would have caused a violent scandal and made people think him insane. Still more would a word of his real convictions as to the episode for which he was being honored; he thought it fortuitous and futile. Not merely the desire to avoid publicity such a word would entail, but also his sense of social duty—in this case, duty to his old comrades of the A. E. F., many of whom had given lives to an ideal he regarded with suspicion—forbade him to speak; forbade him publicly to question any detail of the official version. . . . Yet every day saw him forced deeper into his false position, every event forced upon him more undesired honors, more elements of a career not of his own choosing."

The result was that about two weeks after the dedication of the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington—a ceremony which he, with some 30 others who had received the Congressional Medal of Honor could not avoid attending—he boarded a steamer for a vacation in Cuba. That night he went out on deck and jumped over the side."

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Significance of Fruits and Vegetables; Tells the Truth About Canned Foods

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GENERATION ago, except in mid-summer, fruits were a luxury that only appeared, with nuts, at the end of a festive meal, and vegetables, except for the root crops, had no regular place in the daily diet. But when scientists established the importance of mineral salts in human nutrition, these two groups of foods assumed a position of commanding importance, because next to milk and eggs, they are the chief conveyors of minerals from the soil to man.

With the discovery of vitamins they achieved new distinction, because in their content of these vital substances, they rank with milk and eggs as "protective" foods.

Foods That Safeguard Health

In addition to providing nutrients that are indispensable for buoyant health and normal growth, they possess another important virtue: the indigestible cellulose or bulk yielded by the fibrous framework of the leaves, stems and fruits of plants, has a natural laxative value which helps to insure normal elimination. And finally, they are extremely useful in helping to maintain the acid-base balance of the body, for all vegetables and most fruits yield an alkaline-ash following digestion.

Green Vegetables for Iron

Fruits and vegetables supply varying amounts of practically every mineral element the body requires.

They do not compare with milk as a source of calcium, but substantial amounts of this bone-and-tooth-building substance are to be found in leaf and stem vegetables, carrots, oranges, figs and strawberries. Moreover, investigations have demonstrated that calcium from vegetables is well utilized by adults.

Green vegetables, in general, are outstanding as a source of iron. And it has been further established that their iron is better absorbed and becomes more completely available for nutrition than iron from some other sources.

Some fruits are also valued for their iron content, the more notable including oranges; tomatoes, which are botanically a fruit, though they are classed as a vegetable; strawberries, blackberries, raspberries and huckleberries; and dried figs, dates and prunes.

Vegetables for Vitamin A

We usually think of milk and other dairy products as our most important sources of vitamin A. But recently, it has been determined that the thin green leaves of vegetables are also outstanding in this respect. Weight for weight, when fresh, escarole is more than five times as rich as butter. Young green peas and green string beans are also a good source of this vitamin as are tomatoes, carrots, and sweet potatoes.

Sources of Vitamin C

Vitamin C, which is essential for maintaining the health of teeth and gums and for preventing the degeneration of muscle fibers generally, is obtained almost entirely from fruits and vegetables. The principal sources of this vitamin are the citrus fruits; raw and canned tomatoes and canned tomato juice; strawberries; raw carrots, onions and yellow turnips.

As this vitamin is easily destroyed by heat in the presence of oxygen, the amount present in any fruit or vegetable is greatly reduced by the average home cooking methods. On the other hand, this and other vitamins, as well as minerals, are usually well retained in commercially canned fruits and vegetables.

What About Canned Foods?

I frequently receive letters from readers who question the merits of canned foods. They ask whether it is true that canned foods are devoid of vitamins; whether canned foods are wholesome for children; whether or not canned foods may spoil on the grocer's shelves; and if it is dangerous to eat foods that have stood in the can for a few minutes after being opened.

To discount the value of modern canned foods is to display a lack of knowledge as to how these foods are harvested, prepared and packed. And the failure to use them may result in depriving your family of essential minerals and vitamins.

There are available in cans today, 46 varieties of vegetables, 33 kinds of fruit, and 10 different juices, besides soups, numerous specialties and several kinds of fish. Every one of these presents a healthful and nutritious food in a form that is often superior to the same foods cooked at home. That is partly because of the methods employed and partly because canned foods are processed at the peak of their flavor and freshness.

A Superlative Canned Food

An outstanding example is canned salmon which has been called by one of America's leading food experts, "the cheapest and most nutritious animal food that can be had for children over six."

Very little fresh salmon finds its way into our markets and even then it may be far from "fresh" after a considerable journey packed in ice. On the other hand, salmon canneries have been established in close proximity to the waters from which salmon are taken, so that only a few hours elapse between the time the fish are removed from the water and the moment their rich nourishment is sealed in cans.

Similarly the fruits and vegetables designed for canning are allowed to mature on tree or vine. This means that they develop maximum flavor and vitamin content. Then they are picked, rushed to nearby canneries and hermetically sealed in cans. The sealed cans are then cooked at high heat so as to destroy any bacteria which might be present. Because they are protected from the air during the cooking process, and because the cooking liquors are sealed in the cans, they retain a maximum amount of minerals and vitamins. It is because canned foods are so definitely superior in this respect that physicians encouraged the canning of strained fruits and vegetables for infants and young children.

Fallacies Disproved

Canned foods will keep indefinitely without spoilage, as long as nothing occurs to make the can leak. It is not necessary to remove canned food from the container as soon as the tin is opened, though many homemakers often do so because the food presents a more attractive appearance in a dish or bowl. A hissing sound when opening does not mean that the contents of a can are spoiled, but rather that there was a vacuum in the can, which the air is rushing in to fill.

Thus canned fruits and vegetables are not only "as good as" fresh ones, but are often superior in food values. Every homemaker should see to it that she uses both liberally in the diet of every member of her family, as a means of providing liberal amounts of minerals and vitamins.

Dear Diary:
7:12 a. m.—My bugler awoke me with a beautiful rendition of the call "Attack!" How inspiring. . . . Discovered I had again torn a large hole in the mattress with one of my spurs.
7:22 a. m.—Had some difficulty in deciding which uniform I should wear to breakfast. Finally, chose that of a general of a poison gas division complete with gas mask and trench helmet. Must add two more full-length mirrors; I could not get a proper view of my medals.

High School News

The high school is still feeling rather creepy, even though the cause of their "creeps" is all over, they hope

There was a snake, which escaped from the science room to the assembly the other day. The creature was finally captured much to the relief of the girls, by Mr. Galbreth. It does give a person a funny feeling to know that if he sat down at his seat a snake might crawl out of his desk. Funnier still would be the feeling if you reached for a nice slimy body, instead of your books.

Another snake, also from the science department, was found in the cupboard of the fifth and sixth rooms. Most everyone is feeling much more at ease now that the snakes have been found and turned loose.

The second graders have been reading the stories about firemen in "Susan's Neighbors".

The first graders have a book now. It is called "Before We Read". Darrel and Mabel Greimann were absent four days this week while they visited at their grandmother's house.

We went for a walk on Monday. We found some pretty leaves, some seeds, a milkweed pod, some stones and some flowers. Marjorie found a four-leaf clover.

GRADES 3 & 4

On Wednesday afternoon the 4th grade dramatized "The Landing of Columbus" for the third grade. Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer talked to us Thursday afternoon about her experiences with Indians when she taught an Indian Sunday School class. She also showed us some Indian beaded work. It was very interesting.

The following people have had high scores in spelling for the six weeks: Velma Tiggeman, Donna Mae Heivilin, Esther Mae Hartbeck, Helen Suckow, Peggy Coobs, Phyllis Christiance and Roger Ridder.

We have the main part of our teepee finished. Now, we have to paint Indian designs on it.

We wrote a letter to some of the Indian children at Tama. We hope that we get an answer.

Each year the same question about trapping is asked of Conservation officials. Can traps be lawfully set on the evening of November 9th when the season opens on November 10th? The answer is "no".

Conservation officials explain that the setting or placing of traps for fur-bearing animals on November 9th constitutes an act of trapping and would be unlawful. Trappers are advised to rise earlier on the morning of November 10th and place the traps then as the season opens officially at 12:01 a. m. on that date.

OUR DAY OF REST

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:8-11; Luke 13:10-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.—Exodus 20:8.

Rest—how full of meaning that little word is when we recall that it means quiet for the struggling one, calm for the troubled, repose for the weary, tranquillity for the disturbed, cessation of labor for the worn-out one. God in His infinite wisdom saw that without rest man would soon destroy himself, and He made provision for one day in seven when labor should cease and man should be free for that re-creation of soul and body which should fit him for the labor of the week. Men in their greed have coveted the time God gave for rest and have used it for themselves, and the ragged nerves and broken bodies, to say nothing of the impoverished spirits of our day, testify that it can be done only at our peril.

Our study centers around Scripture passages which have to do with the Jewish Sabbath, but since it was essentially a day of rest, and afforded an opportunity for the worship of God, the principles surrounding it are applicable to our day of rest—the first day of the week, the Lord's Day.

I. Why We Keep a Day of Rest (Exod. 20:8-11).

1. God commanded that there should be a day of rest—one out of seven—and that should be sufficient to cause His people to "remember" the day "to keep it holy." It is cause for grave concern that Sunday has become a day of swimming, hiking, auto-driving, golfing, and one might go on with the list almost indefinitely. Many men or women who have had built into their own characters the stalwart virtues nurtured by family attendance at the house of God, have not only forgotten their own need and responsibility but are destroying every vestige of interest in divine worship in the hearts of their children. It is serious business to go astray oneself, but infinitely more serious to mislead one's own children.

Notice that the day of rest was to be not only for the family but also for servants and for visitors. The employer who operates his factory or office on Sunday violates this commandment. Note also that the man who is to rest on the seventh day is supposed to work on the six days. Some folk neglect to do both.

2. God's command is strengthened by the divine example (v. 11). We are not able to do all things that God does, but here we are privileged to follow His example.

II. How We Keep the Day of Rest (Luke 13:10-17).

The incident recorded by Luke does not give us an exhaustive list of things to be done with our day of rest, but it is interesting to note that our Lord was

1. In the house of God (v. 10). Jesus was in the synagogue. The distinguished Apostle Paul never became too great or too good to attend divine worship. We all need to go to church (if it is at all possible for us to do so) to fellowship with others in the things of Christ. Let us have a revival of church attendance, and not only on Sunday mornings, but also on Sunday night and for midweek prayer meeting.

2. Alert to the needs of others (vv. 11, 12). It is not indicated that the woman asked to be healed. Jesus saw her need and met it. We can not do what he did, but there are needs that we can meet if we are but alert to see them and willing to help.

3. Active in service (v. 13). In spite of the criticism which He knew would come from the lazy and helpless standers-by, Jesus did the work of God. We may glorify God by being ready—yes anxious—to serve in the church. Our daily work is set aside on the Lord's Day not that we should be indolent, but that we should be free to do the Lord's work.

4. Contending for the faith (vv. 14-17). Jesus met the unjust criticism (which, by the way, was leveled at the poor woman because the critic feared Jesus) by a masterly appeal to the law of the Pharisees (vv. 15, 16). But He did more than that, for He ably defended the rights of humanity as superior to the formalities of man-made law. The law is always supreme until the Lawgiver comes, and no law can hinder Him by its letter, as He fulfills its spirit.

We may not speak as Jesus did, that is to declare what the law is, but we may in His name, and by His grace and power declare the full counsel of God, defend it against its critics and withstand those who while bearing the name of Christian leaders only hinder the work of Christ (compare III John 9, 10). For such service we need His guidance, His wisdom, His power, and His grace.

The Wise Man

The wise man is like "the druggist's chest, silent but full of virtues; and the blockhead resembles the warrior's drum, noisy but empty."—Sadi the Persian.

AROUND THE HOUSE

See to Your Lighting.—The type of lighting used can change the entire effect of a room at night.

Kitchen Trash Basket.—Don't buy a straw or wooden trash basket for kitchen uses. Buy one made of metal, so that it can be washed and kept sanitary. Meat papers, cartons and other containers of food are so apt to spill some of the remains of their contents into the basket, and unless the basket can be washed, roaches and mice are bound to be attracted.

Ring-Around-the-Tub.—When little Judy tries to wash off the ring around the bath tub, don't discourage her first clumsy efforts or some day you'll be complaining about what a helpless daughter you have. Take advantage of her normal desire to do the things that you do. Make the most of her childish delight in swishing about a soapy cloth. The earlier you start, the easier it will be to train her in habits of self-reliance and consideration.

A Few Extra Winks.—If you are loath to get up in the mornings, you would be wise to prepare for breakfast just as many things as possible the night before.

Firmly Anchored Straps.—If the shoulder straps on slips are not anchored below the lace or trim on firm reinforced material, they are sure to pull out and perhaps ruin the slip entirely.

Children's Garments.—Children's clothing that is too heavy or improperly balanced may cause rounded or sloping shoulders, say child guidance experts.

Uniform Sized Fruit.—If fruit is preserved either whole or cut into pieces, each one should be uniform in size, so they cook in the same length of time and look better in the jars or cans.

A Slim Waist for Glamour

HERE are two charming new designs that give you the tiny, Victorian waistline—almost an hour-glass effect—that's so fashionable right now. Both accentuate it, too, with perked-up sleeves and full skirts. Both give you a most feminine and appealing look! And it's so easy to make these carefully simplified designs. Each includes a detailed sew chart that carefully explains every step of the way.

Hearthside Coat.

You can relax so thoroughly in this charming design. The fitted-in waistline, the full skirt, are too flattering for words! Make it of taffeta, flannel, challis, moire or velveteen—choosing colors that do nice things to your eyes and hair. This pattern is perforated for short length, too.

Daytime Dirndl.

Of course you want a fall into winter version of the flattering dirndl—and here's the way to make it. With a tailored collar, big buttons down the bodice, Victorian sleeves and (a highlight of charm!) the shirred waistline that looks so delightful on young and supple figures. For this, choose challis, silk print, taffeta or cashmere—preferable in some of the new, rich, warm, lively colorings.

The Patterns.

1498 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40, 42 and 44. For long coat, size 16 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material. For short, 4¼ yards. 1¼ yards grosgrain ribbon to trim.

1617 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material. ¾ yard for contrasting collar, if desired. 1¼ yard braid to trim. 1¼ yard ribbon for sash belt.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Ancient Non-Skid Tires

Non-skid tires date back to chariots of 2800 B. C., and are really not a new idea at all. Non-skid wheels were invented for chariots ages ago, and a model of one of these was excavated by the Iraq expedition recently. The wheel was made rough by studs of copper to keep the chariots from skidding on fast turns in racing and in war.

Iowa Going In Strong For Mechanical Corn Pickers

"More than 4,000 corn pickers were sold and nearly 6,000 were in use in Iowa last husking season," estimates J. B. Davidson, head of the Agricultural Engineering Department, Iowa State College.

These pickers replace during the corn harvest season a probable 15,000 or more men, Ray Murray, administrative assistant for the Works Progress Administration in Iowa, estimated in his report on last year's corn harvest.

Nearly one-half of last year's crop was picked mechanically, Murray said.

Frozen Meat Dries Out If Kept In Locker Too Long

Frozen meats tend to dry out too much if you keep them in storage lockers too long and not properly wrapped, cautions F. J. Beard of the Animal Husbandry Department at Iowa State College.

Fresh pork if kept in lockers more than 3 or 4 months, is apt to become rancid, he believes.

A good grade of beef can safely be held and aged in storage six months or more. Poorer carcasses tend to dry out faster and should be held in storage a shorter period. Fat lamb cuts may be stored for six months. Operators of locker plant ground meat and sausage keep as well as unground meat, said, because of excessive fat. Also, unseasoned meats keep better than seasoned meats. Although poultry can keep for six months or longer periods are advised.

Vegetables, when placed in tight containers and frozen, keep satisfactorily for six months. But all vegetables respond alike to this type of storage. Two of the more common vegetables that will not freeze are tomatoes and lettuce.

Appreciation

Your funeral director has a letter from a lady who had lost her mother. Names are omitted in this quotation from her beautiful letter:

Until I lost the one most dear to me, I did not know what true comfort a funeral director could give the living. I had thought of funeral directors as followers of a gruesome calling, wondered how they had ever been induced to devote themselves to the dead when the needs of the living were so insistent. Now I know it is to alleviate one of the deepest needs of the living that a good funeral director consecrates himself

It had been a long, hard struggle for the little mother, who was my nearest and dearest. For years I had watched her at the very gate of death, apparently unable to go through or come back. It had been an ugly struggle; torture distorted and wasted the little body. But at last the struggle ended, and the shell that my mother had cast off was taken away.

The next time I saw my mother's dear form, in the casket, years of torture had been miraculously obliterated. It was my own dear mother again, as I had not seen her since she became ill. The face looked as I had seen it long ago, the beloved features as I had known them in happy days. The steel gray hair brushed straight back, showed a placid brow and closed deep set eyes at peace; beautiful knotted hands waited for the rose I placed in them. I imagined if she awakened she might smile and say "you see, the last years were just a nightmare; this is real: beauty and peace."

This is what you who prepared my mother's body for goodbye did for me: you showed me a picture that gave the lie to that other picture of pain and struggle. Our little mother was now beautiful and at peace, and we were all comforted and thank you for your kindly service.

Junior Class Will Present First Play Of The Season

"GUESS AGAIN" IS TITLE OF PLAY FOR TWO NIGHT STAND

The Junior Class will present the play of the season when they go on the stage next Wednesday and Thursday nights and give their production of "Guess Again," a three-act farce.

Plays and dramatic works this year are being directed by Mrs. Ernie Lewis. Following is a description of the play as given by one of the Juniors:

"Yeah, Deah! Four bloomin' Henchmen in one cast—two real and two as real as possible. Up goes the lot of monacles and tweedsters and marmalade for breakfast. My word!

But that's not all. Oh my, no! There's Sol Messer, the movie "magician" and Lulu, the big-league newspaper columnist, and Renee, a poor, one of Hollywood's most vicious chisellers, and "Soak-Head" Pratt, the dastardly villain about to foreclose on poor old mes, the hotel proprietor.

A bundle of wits is Waldo Fitts, a clever and general nuisance, who plays any part ever invented. Skinner, who is as 1890-ish as law will allow, and her frenzied insurgent of a daughter, a Mae, and Olive Ordway, who is a raw cauliflower and is ready to moments notice to teach you "uplift walk," and Janet Moore, the comeliest of college sweethearts.

Bill Douglas without a dime but with a headful of ideas—mostly about Janet, and Marcella Jenks, an ambitious but none-too-shrewd news writer, and—why go on? All these people will be turned loose Wednesday and Thursday nights, November 2 and 3, when the Junior Class of Klemme High School brings to you the fastest, funniest play of the decade, "Guess Again." I don't forget Bertie Blodgett, Lord Wiggleton. Four Lord Wiggletons! Yes sir—four.

You'll be doing the "uplift walk" seeing "Guess Again" at the school gymnasium on November 2 and 3.

KLEMMME FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED OUT ON FARM BLAZE

The Klemme Fire Department received a call to the Mrs. Henry Hile farm Tuesday forenoon at about eleven-thirty o'clock where a straw stack was on fire and when they feared might endanger the barn and other farm buildings.

The fire department, however, did not go into action as the blaze seemed to be fairly well confined to the stack and it was not necessary to use water.

CONGRATULATIONS, BILL!

The Garner Leader was chosen as the best Iowa weekly in towns under 1500 population and Publisher Bill Williams was awarded a nice trophy by the 12th annual conference of newspaper men at Iowa City.

The Kossuth County Advance was chosen best in towns of over 1500. In the same class, the Iowa Falls Citizen placed second. Along with Editor Williams the Clayton County Register of Elkader was named second best.

Editor Williams and his force at the Garner Leader are to be congratulated on their achievement.

Two youths stalked into an ice cream parlor in Chetser, Pa., brandished a toy pistol at the proprietor and said, "If you value your life, give up two ice cream cones." After the man refused, they paid for the cones.

RATTLESNAKE SHOT GUNS

To pick up a rattlesnake in your barehands is about the same as pulling your loaded shot gun through a fence muzzle first. That gun and all guns are dangerous just as much so as the rattlesnake. They may be loaded or unloaded but to the careful hunter they are always loaded. The muzzle end of any gun should never be directed toward a human being at any time any more than the head of a rattlesnake should be placed on your bare hand. If you met a rattlesnake face to face on a narrow path your first impulse would be to kill the snake so you could get safely past. So it should be with your gun. If there is danger in handling a loaded gun in a "tight spot," break the gun and unload it. In other words, "kill" the gun in the same manner as a rattlesnake.

Klemme Home Threatened By Fire Sat'day Night

CLOTHING DESTROYED IN FIRE AT THADA HOME SAT. NIGHT

Fire in a hallway between the kitchen and a bedroom at the Walt Thada home destroyed a quantity of clothing Saturday night before the blaze was discovered.

Mr. Thada returned home from the store at about midnight and soon after he had gone to bed Mrs. Thada awoke and smelled smoke. The small hallway was a mass of flames when Mr. Thada discovered the fire, but which he easily extinguished with a couple of pails of water. Out side of the clothing being burned and the walls scorched, no other damage was done.

Included in the list of clothing were an overcoat, topcoat, leather jacket and several pairs of trousers; three of Mrs. Thada's coats and a coat belonging to Mrs. Ed Thompson.

The fire accounts for the "Sunday go meeting" attire Walt appeared in Monday morning. Walt was all dressed up because all his every day clothes were burned up. Insurance will cover the loss.

The Stanley Thada family, who live upstairs in the Thada house, were also aroused by the smell of smoke and a crackling noise.

No Value In Pastures For Dairy Cattle At This Time

Dairymen should start feeding a full winter ration to their milkers, says C. Y. Cannon, professor of dairy husbandry, Iowa State College.

Cows will lose weight and give less milk if feeders rely at all on pasture, Cannon explained.

Pastures are still looking well, but farmers should not be misled into believing their cattle can get any feed value from them, he said. The college herd is now on full winter feed.

"Indian Summer" Follows Cold And Snow Of Week End In Iowa

FIRST KILLING FROST HERE SUNDAY NIGHT, OCTOBER 23

The first killing frost of the season occurred in North Iowa Sunday night, October 23rd when the temperature dropped below the freezing mark for the first time this fall.

At 7:00 o'clock Monday morning the thermometer registered 30 degrees, the skies were clear and the sun shining and with all indications pointing to fair weather ahead.

Snow and Sleet

A light rain, which turned to snow and in some places, sleet, fell in North Iowa, Saturday and Sunday. The fall was very light however, and melted as fast as it fell, as the thermometer was above the freezing mark.

Old timers look for a spell of fair weather following North Iowa's first killing frost.

Indian Summer Here

Since the killing frost and snow, Iowa weather has warmed up and we are now enjoying "Indian Summer" with the thermometer soaring up in the 70's and with the skies clear. Iowa has enjoyed the finest weather this fall in years.

LIST 1938 CERTIFIED HYBRID CORN GROWERS

A guide for selecting hybrid corn and a list of growers whose fields have met the requirements for certification can be had by writing to the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Association at Ames.

"By using certified seed, which carries the official blue certification tag, you have reasonable assurance of getting the kind of hybrid you want," explains Joe L. Robinson, association secretary at Iowa State College.

"To be certified and to carry the blue tag, hybrids must have yielded at least 10 per cent more than the average open-pollinated strains for each of 2 years out of the last 5 in the Iowa Corn Yield Test, Robinson asserts.

"The corn must be equal to or better in stiffness of stalk, with a combined advantage in yield and stiffness of stalk of 25 per cent," he says.

The list of growers includes the hybrid name or number of both and the section of the state where it has met the performance requirements for certification.

The general run of prices now is somewhat lower than during this time last year, Robinson reports.

Eighteen thousand acres were inspected for seed production this summer. This should provide enough seed to plant about a third of the corn acreage in Iowa next spring.

Corn Sealing Is Well Under Way

OVER 57,000 BUSHEL CORN NOW SEALED IN COUNTY

Word has just been received by the County Committee that the 57c loans on 1937 corn will be available through November 15, 1938. This extends the time for making 57c loans on 1937 corn two weeks from the date originally set.

By Monday, October 24, the amount of 1937 corn sealed under the 57c loan program had reached 57,000 bushels in Hancock County. Approximately fifty more applications for sealing such corn were on hand at the same date.

Delivery of the 1937 corn sealed last winter under the 50c loan program is progressing rapidly. About thirty-five carloads had been shipped out of Hancock County by Monday evening. It has been shipped to Duluth, Minneapolis, and Chicago where it is being stored by the government.

Some corn that was sealed last winter is also being bought back by the farmers for feeding purposes. This corn is being sold by the County Committee as agent for the Commodity Credit Corporation at a price which is nine cents below the Chicago closing quotations for December futures as of the preceding day.

Fourteen girls answered roll call with "What I Have Learned During Club Year."

Viola Kropp gave a talk on the 4-H uniform and its meaning.

"A Country Girl's Creed" was read by Pearl Wade, and a talk, "4-H For Rural Girls" was given by Lorraine Bredlow.

Our leader, Mrs. Roger Schlawn, gave us the report of our club work for the past year.

We enjoyed having Miss Zollinger with us. She told us all about our work for the coming year.

After the program a social hour was enjoyed during which time the mothers and girls enjoyed a "Tea," with Viola Kropp and Lorraine Bredlow pouring.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Lois and Lola Gast in November.

RUMMAGE SALE ADDS FUNDS TO MUSIC MOTHERS CLUB

The rummage sale and lunch sponsored by the Klemme Music Mothers Club which was held at the school gym Saturday evening was a decided success. Approximately $65.00 was taken in on the sale and lunch.

Because of unfavorable weather, the crowd was not as large as had been planned for.

The proceeds of the rummage sale will be turned into a fund to be used for buying needed equipment and instruments for the musical organizations of the Klemme schools.

President's Peacemaker Role
Seen as Campaign Strategy

By Joseph W. La Bine

Politics

On Tuesday, November 8, the United States will elect an entire house of representatives, one-third of its senate and a host of governors. Since U. S. politics swings back and forth from Republican to Democratic domination, since the Democratic swing which began in 1933 has reached and passed its peak, the safest prediction is that Republicanism will start swinging back into power this year.

Obviously, it is Franklin Roosevelt's ambition to stymie a Republican comeback. But his chief interest in last summer's primaries was not Republicanism, but the construction of a coherent liberal party through so-called "purge" tactics. Since "purge" failed, since preservation of New Deal gains already made is now more important than party purification, November's election has resumed normal political color for the first time since 1930.

FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT

As in 1936, this year's Republican candidates can base a strong campaign on New Deal failure. Unlike 1933 and 1936, this year's Democratic campaign becomes essentially a defensive proposition. But developments of the past month show that the New Deal's defense will not feature such argumentative points as AAA, relief and budget-balancing, will attempt instead to shift public interest on Franklin Roosevelt's accomplishments as a peacemaker. Three points of peace:

World Peace: The world may never know if President Roosevelt helped smooth over the Czech-German crisis, but his final message to Adolf Hitler and simultaneous pleas to every other world power came only a few hours before the Reichsfuehrer called his historic Munich parley. But, coming when it did, Roosevelt intercession looked tremendously successful. Thus, praising the administration's foreign policy as a safeguard to world peace, Democrats hope the voting public will overlook the fact that Munich's meeting did nothing to help democracy's cause, was instead a bloodless victory for Germany.

Business Peace: If the administration's foreign policy helped win world peace, it also helped U. S. business. Upshot has been a tremendous stock market upturn, greater steel and automobile production, higher railroad carloadings. But part of this upturn is also due to governmental "pump priming," which is just beginning to show its effect. Nevertheless these signs of optimism came at a time when U. S. business decided to quit warring on the administration, choosing instead to play ball until a Republican government throws out New Deal measures which it considers oppressive. President Roosevelt has asked for less "saber rattling" and more co-operation between government and business. Charles Hook, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, has assured him that business is eager for co-operation. Thus, Franklin Roosevelt looms as a peacemaker with business.

Industrial Peace: When the American Federation of Labor convened in Houston, Texas, the President messaged his desire for a settlement of the factional war between A. F. of L. and John Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization. Obviously a solid labor front, thoroughly New Deal, would be a potent vote getter. How it could exercise this solidified strength against employers is an unpleasant thought, but the average business man is inclined to hope a patch-up will bring more conservatism to labor. Though the President's peacemaking effort has completely failed, the nation may well appreciate his gesture.

Despite the political connotions these peace efforts must certainly carry during election season, the President's self-chosen role of arbiter wins favor with a war-weary U. S. populace. Whether this popular appeal will overshadow Republican criticism on November 8 is anybody's guess.

Domestic

In 1930 the census showed 25.3 per cent of all U. S. women over 16 were gainfully employed. By 1937, said John D. Biggers, resigning as head of President Roosevelt's unemployment census, the percentage had jumped to 31.7. Reasons: (1) technical and cultural changes; (2) economic necessity. Mr. Biggers found the corner bakery and laundry relieved Mrs. Housewife of many duties, leaving her free to boost the family's income or replace an unemployed husband as breadwinner.

His comment: "This is an economic and social trend worthy of consideration."

A much more blunt comment came from the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, famed radiator and faculty member of the Catholic university at Washington: "The only real success for a woman, the only real vocation is motherhood. . . . Why be equal to men when you are superior?"

Until this year, most U. S. citizens regarded the foreign spy as a comic strip and fiction character, although government intelligence officers have long known the nation is infested with agents from Russia, Germany, Italy and Japan. First real action to combat spies is the house committee on un-Americanism which has heard evidence connecting espionage with everyone from Shirley Temple to unnamed industrial magnates. Incoherent though its findings may be, the un-Americanism committee has crystallized enough U. S. sentiment to demand action. After reviewing the situation, President Roosevelt has laid plans for co-ordinating the work of such spy seekers as the army and navy intelligence departments, federal bureau of investigation, secret service and other treasury law enforcement units. Already in operation is a new law requiring all agents of foreign principals to register with the state department. Though the measure has no teeth, it will enable the U. S. to keep an eye on propagandists, thereby paving the way for action against spies.

Regardless of who holds power when civil service is expanded, it will create furore in the minority ranks because present job-holders will be favored. On this assumption, a furore will come in Republican ranks February 1 when 81,000 Democratic workers in so-called emergency agencies are moved into civil service classification. Another 44,000 may be added later.

Religion

Last March, just before Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler marched into Austria, Vienna's Theodore Cardinal Innitzer urged Catholics to vote for German annexation as a means of blocking Communism. Though Cardinal Innitzer knew German Catholics had suffered at the Reich's hands, he plumped for Nazism because Herr Buerckel, Hitler's representative, had quoted the Saviour: "Render unto Caesar that which is Caesar's and unto God that which is God's."

Criticized by the Vatican, Cardinal Innitzer moreover was to learn that "Caesar" Hitler would take all he could get, shearing every vestige of power from the Catholic church. Early in September the cardinal protested when marriage was made a state affair, when Catholic schools were frowned upon, when Catholic nuns were ousted from hospitals. Later he complained when priests were denied the right of administering church comforts to political prisoners. The state, it was apparent,

THEODORE CARDINAL INNITZER
After Nazism, he changed his mind.

strove to push Catholicism into the background, to raise Austrian youth in Nazi ideology instead of Catholic theology.

When Cardinal Innitzer protested, a mob strongly reminiscent of the Middle Ages descended on his palace, made it a shambles, threw 60-year-old Father Johann Kravanik from a second-story window. The Cardinal himself was cut by flying glass but appeared next morning at Vienna's famed St. Stephen's cathedral.

Only official Nazi answer to Vatican protests has been shoulder-shrugging, but Vienna's mob scene may have far-reaching effects. Already seen is a surging German religious revival which is bound to crash headlong into the state's domineering program. From this point, Germany might either become an anti-Christ state or modify its religious position. Meanwhile, church and state are girding for battle.

Foreign

Since the notorious peace of Munich, almost every day has seen the stars of Great Britain and France descend to new lows, torn by disension from within, heaped with ridicule from without. Hardly had Alfred Duff Cooper resigned from the British cabinet in protest against Prime Minister Chamberlain's "sell-out" before Winston Churchill arose in the house of commons to state his views. He prophesied that England will be dependent on German good will for its very existence. "We have sustained defeat without war, and the whole equilibrium of Europe has been changed," he summed up.

That Prime Minister Chamberlain agrees is shown by his insistence on a high-speed rearmament program, a move quite contradictory to his Anglo-German peace pact and his treaty with Italy. It is an admission that not even Mr. Chamberlain trusts Adolf Hitler or Benito Mussolini very far.

WINSTON CHURCHILL
He, among others, was ashamed.

Meanwhile, France has been quick to make peace with Italy by recognizing her conquest of Ethiopia. Her parliament, by overwhelmingly approving the Munich pact, agreed that no price was too high for peace even though it meant relegating France to the position of a second-rate power. But sorely-taxed Frenchmen want to know why they must pay for a huge army and navy that refuses to fight.

There are other signs, as well. The resignation of Czech President Eduard Benes in the face of growing public sentiment against weak-kneed democracies, indicates that Czechoslovakia is giving in to demands for co-operation with the Rome-Berlin axis. It is almost humorous to reflect that Great Britain has agreed to defend Czechoslovakia's integrity. Even more tragic is Chancellor Hitler's demand for reparations from Czechoslovakia, to be paid out of the $150,000,000 loan recently granted the Czechs by Great Britain.

With central Europe turned over completely to dictatorship, with Russia breaking her French alliance and crawling back into silence, France and Britain apparently stand alone, friendless, merely tolerated by their "friends"—Italy and Germany.

Taxation

Though campaigning politicians do not speak of it, next winter's congress will probably turn the income tax headache into a nightmare. With another federal deficit in prospect, with high income brackets already taxed to the limit, the solution will be a broadening of tax base on middle and low income groups, i. e., the man making less than $50,000 a year. Present exemptions are $1,000 for single persons, $2,500 for married persons, with $400 extra for each dependent under 18 years of age. If 2,067,736 persons filed 1935 returns on that basis, an estimated 8,400,000 would yield from $200,000,000 to $500,000,000 more under the proposed plan for reducing exemptions to $500 for single persons, $1,000 for married persons and $200 for dependents. Chief victims would be those now paying in the low income brackets, a prospect that bodes virtual political suicide for any congressman who favors the measure. Only alternative would be federal sales taxation, which "horrified" President Roosevelt when he first took office and has since been a dead issue.

War

A weird combination of communistic-democratic government rules Loyalist Spain, plainly holding the sympathy of democratic France and England. Rebel Spain has the support of totalitarian Italy and Germany. Since the totalitarian team beat the democratic team at Munich's recent peace parley, Loyalist Spain wonders if she will not become another Czechoslovakia, sold down the river to keep peace in Europe's quarreling family. This theory has been borne out in talk of an Anglo-French-Italian pact whereby Italy would withdraw her support to Rebel Spain (a move already started), whereby France would close her border against arms shipments to Loyalist Spain. Thus isolated, Spain's civil warriors would eventually be brought to talk peace. Since France and England are anxious to keep Italy's good will, there is every reason to believe that ultimate victory would come to Premier Benito Mussolini's very good friend and ally, Rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

NEW YORK.—As America looks to its air defenses, it finds, as acting chief of the army air corps, a pioneer technician in the adaptation of the airplane to war uses.

Arnold Seems Well Qualified For Air Chief He is Brig. Gen. H. H. Arnold, assuming command of the corps after the death of Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, in a plane wreck.

Soon after the Wright brothers had made their first few faltering air jumps, young Lieutenant Arnold was sent to Dayton, Ohio, not only to learn to fly, but to make technical studies of the possibilities of aircraft for observation and fighting. He was among the earliest of the army's trained fliers, and, in 1912, won the Mackay medal for a triangular flight, 30 miles to the leg, from College Point, Md., over Washington and Fort Meyer. In 1935, he again won this trophy for his exploit of the previous year in leading a flight of 10 bombing planes from Washington to Fairbanks, Alaska.

He has been an aggressive champion of aerial defense, reprimanded in 1926 for what was considered an excess of zeal for air armament. In 1917, he organized and commanded the Panama Canal air defenses, and was with the A. E. F. in France, in the closing months of the World war, on inspection duty. He became assistant chief of the air corps in January, 1936. His technical studies have included photography, special means for topographical observations, and aerial mass tactic, as well as engineering problems of flying.

He is 51 years old, a native of Gladwyn, Pa., graduated from West Point in 1907.

IN HIS Washington garden, Robert E. Bondy has some late-blooming roses and chrysanthemums, which are now in bud. The hurricane never touched them. He has had to turn his back on his garden for a time, as his world outside of it became mostly chaos. As national director of disaster relief for the Red Cross, he's been doing a heroic work in New England. His roses may be one kind of act of God, but his business is mainly with the other kind—Swinburne's "Forsaken Garden," where "wild waves and spent winds labor."

He was a letter-man on the University of Chicago baseball team and a police reporter for a Chicago newspaper. On the latter job, he had a ringside seat at man-made disasters, but, in his later career, took up with the more elemental upsets and breakdowns.

For 19 years, he has organized disaster relief for the Red Cross in the Lake, Southern and Washington divisions. He is one of our most seasoned and efficient battlers against all the ills and dangers that come in the wake of flood, fire, earthquake or any other widespread ruin. He is a native of Minnesota, in his early forties, his hair thinning—and no wonder.

IN WASHINGTON, Congressman Lucius N. Littauer of New York used to beat even Uncle Joe Cannon in the house poker games. And just a little something out of the kitty is the $2,250,000 graduate school of public administration, which he handed Harvard and which recently opened. Mr. Littauer is the widely known glove potestate of Gloversville. He is 79 years old, graduated from Harvard 59 years ago. His father, a German immigrant, founded the family glove factory. He has established many benefactions for useful public purposes, among them a gift of $1,000,000 in 1929, to "bring about a better understanding among all mankind." He provided $100,000 to recondition his old boyhood swimming hole.

THE subject of totalitarian humor is brought up by President James L. McConaughy, of Wesleyan college. He says that's what's the matter with the iron men—no humor. He finds humor the salt and leaven which will save democracy, it short-circuits egoism and pulls down the stuffed shirts, and is kin to humility.

Doctor McConaughy, New York-born, Yale '09, has been president of Wesleyan since 1924. He is a modern, alert pedagogue, with a broad social point of view and an awareness of timely problems.

HAVE you heard that there is one thing that Charlie Chaplin has not yet been able to buy? And it's something that he wants very much.

It is some of the first comedies that he made, years ago, for Essanay, in Chicago. Since he became famous and wealthy he has bought most of those early pictures, but he missed a few, which were acquired by somebody else.

They've been put together, with a prologue by someone else, and the great comedian, who won't talk for the screen, can't do anything about it.

Paulette Goddard's first picture was "Modern Times." She is now working in her second one since that one, "Dramatic School," in which Luise Rainer also appears. And—they will be co-starred! Better see the picture when it's released, and find out whether Miss Goddard is a genius, or whether experience just don't mean a thing where acting in pictures is concerned.

The executives of Twentieth Century-Fox feel that something ought to be done about an outrage that somebody else plans to commit. And Shirley Temple is involved in it. New Grand National wants to do "A Life of Shirley Temple," in which several shorts made in the days before Shirley was America's Sweetheart would be used. Looks like another case for the lawyers.

While we're on the subject of Shirley, it was discovered that she photographed better without make-up for technicolor shots. You'll see her just as she is in "The Little Princess."

Gracie Allen is stepping out by herself these days—and rather important steps they are, too. She is making a picture without George Burns—

"The Gracie Allen Murder Case"—and she has been exhibiting some of her own paintings at a New York art gallery, and is finding out how it feels to be an artist.

Auditions were held recently at NBC for a client who didn't know what type of singer he wanted for his program. Finally his choice simmered down to two of the people he heard, a soprano and a tenor.

That evening Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hufsmith were discussing their day.

Both are singers, both had had auditions that day. Not until then did they discover that they had been trying out for the same job; he was the tenor, and she, known on the air as Muriel Wilson, was the soprano.

Avalon Time, one of radio's new shows, is strictly All-American. It features the Andrews Sisters (the girls who did so much to make "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen" a hit), Red Foley, Kitty O'Neill, the laughing lady, the Neighbor Boys, the Rhythm Singers, the Avalon chorus and a 16-piece orchestra. The comedy dialogue will be written by Latham Owens, who has done scripts for Joe Penner, Al Jolson, Ken Murray and others. It will be heard once a week, from coast to coast—and if you don't like it it won't be the fault of all the people who have slaved to make it what it is!

2,000,000 Now "Fly Through the Air With the Greatest of Ease"

Recent Celebration of National Air Travel Week Dramatized the Amazing Development of Airplane Transportation of Passengers, Mail and Express During the 10 Years Since a Famous Author Paid $400 for a 33-Hour Flight from Los Angeles to New York.

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

SEVERAL thousand Americans recently enjoyed, for the first time, the realization of an ancient dream of mankind. They "flew through the air with the greatest of ease"—not on the flying trapeze, nor yet on Aladdin's magic carpet, but in swift, multi-engined airplanes that are the ultimate in comfort and safety.

This "mass flight" of at least 50,000 people was a part of the observance of National Air Travel Week, sponsored by the aviation industry of the country, including the 21 domestic air transport lines and Pan-American, to celebrate the tenth year jubilee of air transportation and call to the attention of the nation the spectacular growth of a service which has risen in 10 years from an extremely small industry, chiefly dependent on air mail, to one which now carries more than 2,000,000 passengers every year plus millions of pounds of air mail and express.

To anyone who knows anything about the history of aviation in this country, the question immediately arises, "Why call it the tenth anniversary of air transportation?" If I remember rightly, they were flying the mail 20 years ago, in 1918, and the first transcontinental service was begun in 1924 and within two years passengers were being carried. Why didn't we celebrate this tenth anniversary two years ago, in 1930?" The answer is this:

It's true that passengers were being carried by airplane in 1926 but in that year air transport was still an experiment. The air lines then in existence were using small single-engined planes and they definitely did not encourage passenger traffic. These lines existed mainly to transport the mail and when they did take passengers, these passengers rode on the mail sacks or crouched down in small, cramped cockpits. The pilots of these ships weren't any too happy to have a passenger along and be made to feel the extra responsibility for his safety.

"Lindy" Points the Way.

Then came the year 1927. "Lucky Lindy," otherwise Charles A. Lindbergh, a former mail pilot, made the flight across the Atlantic and the whole world "flung his name against the stars." The impetus given to aviation was immediate. By the end of that year air transportation was emerging from the experimental stage. One factor which hastened it was the development of the larger multi-engined flight equipment. These powerful motors meant a larger margin of safety in carrying passengers.

Then came another historic event, but one not so widely known, although it was widely reported during the recent celebration of National Air Travel Week. John Monk Saunders, a well-known American author, paid $400 for a one-way ticket between Los Angeles and New York and became the first pay passenger aboard the first regular scheduled flight in a multi-engined transport plane. That marked the real beginning of modern passenger air transport.

As a matter of fact, Saunders was only one of 47,840 Americans who traveled by air that year. But not all of these were flown in multi-engined ships. Most of the small operators were still flying small single-engined ships since the only foundation needed for starting an airline in those days was to have a few pilots, a plane or two and a place to fly to.

In 1928 the air lines had a total of 325 single and multi-engined transports in service and flew a total of 10,673,450 miles. In 1938, just 10 years later, the air lines have about 386 transports (all multi-engined) and during 1937 flew the astonishing total of 76,996,163 miles, carrying 1,267,580 passengers. In fact, one of the most amazing of all air transport's accomplishments has been its steady expansion during a decade that has been marked by the contraction and retrenchment of other lines of industry.

Pioneer Passengers.

But it is in the "human element," the how-does-this-affect-you-and-me side of the business, that the most interesting example of progress is noted. The first coast-to-coast travelers were true adventurers. They paid $400 for a transcontinental ticket, sat upright in a small metal chair with little upholstery; their plane landed every few hundred miles for fuel; little food, if any, was served; and the coast-to-coast journey took 33 hours. In 1938, at the beginning of the second decade the flight between New York and Los Angeles or San Francisco has been reduced to an overnight journey in a large, comfortable berth aboard a sound-proofed transport. The coast-to-coast air fare has been reduced to less than $150. The passenger enjoys a hot full-course meal that is served without any extra cost. The business man journeying from his New York office to the Pacific coast does not lose a single business hour in spanning the continent.

The remarkable advance in air transportation is visualized by the pictures of the various types of airplanes that have been flown in coast-to-coast service since 1928. The first coast-to-coast mail-passenger service requiring 33 hours, was flown with a single-engined 90-mile-an-hour biplane shown at the top. Next came the tri-motored plane with a cruising speed of 105 miles an hour. In 1933 air transportation was revolutionized with the introduction of the world's first "three-mile-a-minute" twin-engined, all-metal, low-wing monoplane. The bottom picture shows the latest refinement of the twin-engined type with a top speed of 212 miles an hour.

Fares Cut in Half.

In a decade air fares in the United States have been reduced from an average of 12 cents a mile to 5 1/4 cents, while speed has been more than doubled and comforts not even thought of in those days have made air travel a luxury form of transportation. Simultaneously, with decrease in fare, faster schedules and greater comfort, the industry has written a record of safe, dependable operation in view of the tremendous increase in flying, which is a standard for the world.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh when he was an air-mail pilot and flew the first mail plane on the St. Louis-Chicago line in 1926.

With the inception of this vast air line system the number of seats available for passenger consumption have increased from 600 in 1928 to 3,600 in 1938. In 1938 a total of 447,716,419 seat miles were flown by the nation's air lines. Ten years ago an average of 131 passengers per day rode on air line planes. Today sees 3,200 persons board United States airline ships daily.

Safer Than Automobiles.

Safety has, of course increased tremendously in recent years, the best example being that in 1928, the air lines flew only 945,476 miles per fatal accident as compared with 13,214,301 miles per fatal accident in 1937. Safety has reached the point that on a mileage travel basis, a person is safer on a modern transport plane than he is driving his own automobile between the same cities today.

The air line plane of 1928 had an average speed of 90 miles an hour. This was an exceptionally swift pace, but not the zenith by any means. Manufacturers set to work to build faster equipment. By 1933 some of the air lines were operating planes with cruising speeds of three miles a minute. At the turn of the first decade the average air line plane cruises at 200 miles an hour.

Little or nothing was known about the supercharging of engines in 1928—for that reason air line planes flew low, between one and two thousand feet. A flight above 4,000 feet was really high flying. Rough air was usually the rule at these low altitudes and approximately 10 per cent of the air travelers were troubled by air sickness. Little or nothing was known about the scientific ventilation of airplane cabins and it was not uncommon for a cabin to be filled with motor fumes. Heating of cabins was accomplished directly from engine exhausts. The ships of 1928 carried a limited amount of fuel and had to land every few hundred miles for gas.

The modern plane today has a cruising range of 1,000 to 1,500 miles flying at 10,000 feet, where smooth air prevails. The roaring, booming noise of the throbbing motors of 1928 has been eliminated by soundproofing and the cabins are ventilated by the constant flow of fresh, filtered air. Steamheating is automatically controlled and the cabin of the modern transport has the atmosphere of a well-appointed living room. Long-range flying came in vogue a few years ago and today some of the domestic routes are operating non-stop flights of 900 miles. But even this is not the epitome. The Douglas planes of today have bona fide cruising ranges of 1,500 miles and test flights of nearly 2,000 miles without even stopping for fuel have been made.

In air transport, as in any other, the safety of the passengers depends ultimately, of course, upon the men operating it. The physical fitness, mental alertness and practiced skill of the man behind the wheel in an automobile, in the pilot house of a ship or in the cab of a locomotive determines pretty much whether or not you'll reach your destination safely if you travel by land or water. The same thing is true if you travel by air.

But if you have an idea that you are entrusting your life to a "knight of the air," a dashing, devil-may-care fellow, given to doing spectacular stunts and taking chances—forget it! That may have been true in the post-war period of aviation but it isn't true now.

The average pilot of 1928 was a man who, if he had 2,000 hours of experience, was regarded as a veteran airman. He knew little about night flying and had no faith in theories that some day airplanes could be controlled entirely by instruments in his cockpit.

The average pilot in command of a big 12-ton airliner today is a highly professional man who has journeyed a million miles or more in the sky aboard transport planes. He is a technical man, too, understanding that he has been provided with an airplane in perfect condition, every proven aid to the science of air navigation, and with corps of ground workers who are studying weather reports, communicating with him by radio and generally directing the orderly procedure of his flight with marked efficiency.

Frequent Examinations.

Today's pilot is a perfect physical specimen. He undergoes a thorough physical examination on an average of every three months. He leads a normal, retiring life when he's not putting in his maximum of 85 hours in the air each month. The average air line captain has his own home and flower garden, plays a good game of golf, is a camera enthusiast and spends as much time as possible with his wife and children. He is a solid citizen in his community and is a great student, always seeking to improve and strengthen his knowledge of air line flying. Often you can find him at his terminal flying a training device that simulates every conceivable flight characteristic of an airplane, even to the guidance of airplanes by directive radio beams.

The cockpit of an air liner has grown to a scientific office where the pilot has been provided with proper tools to accomplish his work. The cockpit of 1928 boasted of sparse instruments and a few controls. Today's air line has an automatic "robot" pilot, for example, that is capable of guiding the airplane in the same precise manner that the human pilot does. Hence, the human pilot can turn over command of the plane to the "robot" pilot at any time. All instruments are in duplicate and the pilot can guide his airplane by looking at his instruments.

Motors have reached such a high degree of perfection that emergency landings because of motor difficulties are virtually unknown. Today's transports are capable of taking off and flying with only one engine operating. New type propellers have been perfected that greatly reduce motor noise.

Weather has long been an acknowledged factor in air transportation and was an early handicap to schedule efficiency. The system of weather reporting in 1928 was far from satisfactory and pilots were not provided with two-way radio communication so that, like today, they could receive up-to-the-minute weather trends. Because nothing was known about instrument flying, schedule after schedule had to be cancelled. Weather is today still a factor in schedule efficiency, but not the great problem it was 10 years ago because much has been learned about the science of meteorology as applied to aviation. The airlines still have complete safety as its goal and when weather conditions of extreme proportions arise, flights are cancelled.

HOW to SEW RUTH WYETH SPEARS

"DEAR Mrs. Spears:—I want to thank you for the clear diagram of how to hang curtains in your Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator. This was just what I have been needing as we have casement windows and no shades in our living room. With a pull of the cord my new curtains shut out the light or the outside view. I wonder if you would help me with another problem? I do not want to make the curtains for the rest of the house. Thought I would buy ruffled net ones. Do you think they would be too commonplace? J. T."

Answer: Here is a suggestion for hanging ruffled curtains that will make your windows little different from those of your neighbors and lend no end of style to your rooms. Double curtain rods are needed to give the crossed effect and a valance board is added to the top of the window as shown. Here the valance is the sort that comes with ready made curtains and the top is folded back to make it double. In thumbtacking it to the valance board, do not stretch it—just "ease it on" so that it hangs well. If you feel that the windows need color, the valance and tie backs may be of plain glazed chintz that repeats the strongest color in your room color scheme. A contrasting valance may be either plain or gathered.

Let Father and Young Son and Little Sister help you make the home a center of interest. Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator contains many useful things that every one may take a hand in making. Book 2 shows you with pictures how to make many lovely gifts. Books are 25 cents each. Order both books today and get the patchwork quilt leaflet picturing 36 authentic embroidery stitches free. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

So Realistic

After the young singer had finished her second encore, the old lady leaned toward her and said: "Thank you so much for your songs, my dear. They took me back to childhood days on my father's farm. There were times when you sang that I could shut my eyes and fairly hear the old front gate creaking in the wind." —Montreal Star.

AROUND THE HOUSE

To Clean Satin Slippers.—Rub slippers with a cloth dipped in a little alcohol to which a few drops of lemon juice have been added.

Salt Improves Coffee.—The flavor of coffee is improved if a little salt is sprinkled on the bottom of the pot before the coffee is put in.

Keeping Paint.—If a can of paint has to be left open, stir it thoroughly, so as to dissolve all the oil, then fill up with water. When it becomes necessary to use the paint pour off the water and you will find it as fresh as when first opened.

To Press Ribbons.—Dampen ribbons and iron them between tissue paper.

Bright Clothes for Children.—You may not like vividly colored clothes, but they are the safest thing to wear in traffic. It is advisable to dress children in such costumes to help protect them from accidents.

STARTLING FACTS ABOUT RURAL AMERICA

$5,000,000. ANNUALLY IN FAIR PRIZES

#83 SOW PRODUCES $1750.00 LITTER OF PIGS

50,000,000 PEOPLE ATTEND FAIRS EACH YEAR IN U.S.A.

It isn't difficult to visualize why agriculture is the world's largest industry, after reviewing some of the figures just released by the Firestone Farm Service Bureau. These amazing facts were uncovered in connection with the Voice of the Farm noonday radio program.

(1) Five million dollars is the figure that's handed out in fair prize money each season. State fairs contribute about half of the figure and county fairs put up the remainder.

(2) C. P. Mills, St. Joseph, Illinois, farmer, has shown an extra profit of about $1,000 annually since he started keeping books on his farm operations. His bookkeeping takes about 208 hours a year—and that figures $5.00 an hour.

(3) In Nehawka, Nebraska, Harry Knabe paid $83.00 for a Hampshire brood sow. The $1750.00 he received for the first litter of pigs for breeding purposes was a gross profit of 2106% on his investment, and he kept two pigs from the litter.

(4) Crowds equivalent to almost two-fifths of the population of the United States attend fairs each year. Fairs outdraw the attendance at big league baseball, college football, basketball and professional hockey combined.

Through the efforts of the Firestone Farm Service Bureau millions of farmers throughout the country are receiving authentic information concerning problems that confront them in the adoption of better farming practices. This organization maintains a corps of practical farm experts and counselors who are prepared to handle any type of farm problem that may arise.—Adv.

WHAT A MAN!
Some fellows can get away with anything. There's one in our neighborhood that does.

Morals don't mean a thing to him. He's unmarried, and lives openly with a woman he's crazy about; and doesn't care what the neighbors say or think. He has no regard for truth or law.

The duties of the so-called good citizen are just so much bunk as far as he is concerned. He doesn't vote at either the primaries or the general election. He never thinks of paying a bill.

We have seen him take a $2.00 taxi ride without giving the driver so much as a pleasant look. The driver only stared at him and muttered something silly.

SAFETY RULES FOR HUNTERS

Going hunting?

Every year the hunting season brings a crop of accidents. If you are planning a hunting excursion, you'll be interested in 10 safety rules for hunters prepared by the National Safety Council. Here they are:

1. Never carry a loaded gun in an automobile, wagon or vehicle. Keep it in its case until you start hunting.
2. Before shooting, look into the breech and make sure that the barrels are clear.
3. Keep the safety lock on until just ready to shoot.
4. Never pull a gun through a fence. Carry it over with you. Keep the muzzle pointed away from yourself and others.
5. Never lay a loaded gun down in a boat. Never lift a gun from a boat by the barrel.
6. Don't set a loaded gun against a tree or a fence or leave it lying on the ground. Even a playful dog might cause it to be discharged.
7. After a fall or a climb, or after walking over plowed ground, examine your gun to make sure the barrels are clear.
8. Never shoot at objects if you can't see them distinctly. They might be human beings.
9. Before shooting at game, make sure that no house, barn or other building is in the line of fire.
10. Don't leave your gun or shells near a stove, a fireplace or other fire.

These precautions will help to keep an accident from marring your hunting fun.

KEEP YOUR DISTANCE
"Keep your distance" sounds unfriendly, but it's just a piece of friendly advice to motorists.

When driving on the highway, learn to keep a safe distance between your car and the one ahead.

This will help to protect you from sudden movement on his part, and will enable you to see the road ahead and prepare for emergencies.

This is one of the safe driving practices to help you enjoy your driving in safety.

FUR HUNTERS NOTE

Many hunters prefer to take fur-bearing animals with the aid of dogs and guns rather than traps. The pursuit of fur-bearing animals with dogs, with or without guns, requires a hunting license. The sale of skins or hides taken without traps does not require a trapping license. They may be sold on the regular hunting license to buyers within the state. If sold outside of the state a special permit tag authorizing such shipment must first be obtained. Hunters are warned not to shoot any mink or muskrat with a shotgun or to molest or disturb and muskrat house, beaver dam, skunk or raccoon den.

Lake Granted

The state conservation commission has received a $110,678 grant for dredging and otherwise improving Storm Lake at Storm Lake. In recent years the lake has silted so at this point as to be too shallow for recreational and wildlife purposes. The dredging, which it is estimated will take three years and require the removal of about seven million cubic yards of silt, will increase the average depth of the lake to around 12 or 14 feet. The silt removed will be used for a peninsula and breakwater.

Red Coral Always Prized

It is red coral that is and always has been prized, not solely for jewelry and buttons, but as a charm to bring safety, health and secrets not revealed to the ordinary person. As ancient Gauls rushed headlong into battle, they trusted their safety to their swords, strength and the "magic" coral imbedded in their shields or helmets. Many Italians and Indians regard coral as protection against the "evil eye." The world's red coral comes from the reefs off the Mediterranean coast of Africa, says the Washington Post, and is obtained chiefly by Italians.

CONSERVATION FILM NOW SHOWING

The new three-reel sound motion picture "Iowa Comes of Age" has been released to Iowa theatres for showing. The historical and conservation film is being presented by the State Conservation Commission. Under the copyrighted heading of "A Phototrial" the picture "Iowa Comes of Age" carries a theme of conservation based on Iowa's Centennial year. It carries significant bits of Iowa's history and shows the state before man destroyed the natural resources. The advancement of agriculture, streamline age and the depletion of soil are part of the story. There are many unusual shots of Iowa's state parks and preserves and the natural wonders of the state. Action pictures of fishing, swimming, sailboating, and winter sports such as skiing, tobogganing and iceboating are also included.

The latter, and interpretive part of the film shows modern farming methods and illustrates Iowa's agricultural pre-eminence. There are airplane shots of leading cities, outstanding examples of home ownership and pictures of Iowa's vast educational system, with views of colleges and universities. A predominant pattern of history and conservation runs throughout with a prophetic and stirring story of state achievement and the Iowa of tomorrow unfolding in an interesting manner interwoven with many facts about Iowa.

Every person interested in history, conservation, agriculture or education is urged to see this picture. It is especially good for students.

Charles Cole, pretended deaf and dumb beggar in Chicago, was arrested for cursing a man who refused to give him money.

After arresting Mrs. Marian Shaw of New York City for the 53rd time on a charge of speeding, the judge announced that he would send her husband to jail for permitting her to drive if she were arrested again.

About 275 students of the University of Iowa now are living in 11 cooperative dormitories. They do their own housework and cooking and thereby solve financial problems which otherwise would bar them from attending the university.

during the Pleistocene period, before the glaciers leveled this part of the country into its present terrain, these great animals and many other strange beasts roamed the hills. Climatic and other changes caused the extermination of most of them and they are now known in Iowa only from their remains which are often found while digging wells or gravel. In Siberia mammoths have been found that had fallen into crevices in the ice thousands of years earlier and frozen solid. These unfortunate animals were so perfectly preserved that people have actually eaten the flesh of animals dead for twenty thousand years.

Readers will remember that a year or so ago Quentin Stille and Ray Smith found bones, determined to be those of a mammoth, while digging tile ditch on the Arthur Knoke farm west of town.

SOYBEAN HAY IS GOOD FEED FOR HORSES, CAINE ASSERTS

If you are one of the many Iowa farmers who has good soybean hay in his barn don't be afraid to feed it to your horses this winter.

Soybeans when cut for hay before the bean has hardened too much, give splendid results when fed to horses, A. B. Caine, professor of animal husbandry at Iowa State College, has found.

The bean itself is relished more if fed in and with the hay. If it is fed separately it should be chopped. If crushed too long before feeding the beans become rancid.

Only 50 per cent of the roughage should consist of soybean hay. The remaining half can be made up of either oat straw, corn fodder, wild hay or timothy.

Base Figures Accepted

All of the bids submitted were within the estimates of the architect. The "base" figure, which means bids which included all first class material, with no deductions made for substitutes or lower priced materials was accepted on all bids. The "base" figure includes approved type weather-stripped windows, selected face brick; asphalt floor throughout the entire building, complete set of steel locking doors and wardrobes; hot air heating plant complete with automatic stoker and Johnson control. General Election Nov. 8, Polls Open At Eight A. M.

FIVE PARTIES REPRESENTED ON STATE BALLOT THIS YEAR

Cross May Be Placed In Circle To Simplify Voting

Tuesday is general election day and voters of Iowa may go to their voting place between 8:00 a. m. and 8:00 p. m. and cast their ballot.

This year there are five parties represented on the ballot. The first column is Democratic and next in line is Republican, Farmer-Labor, Progressive and Prohibition. Although the ballot requires a column for the "Independent" ticket, there are no candidates on that ticket this year.

Can Cross The Circle

The circle at the top of the ballot and on the left of each party, is still a bit confusing to many voters. However, it is simple to mark the ballot by using the circle.

If a straight party ticket is being voted, then simply mark a cross in the circle. For instance, if you wish to vote for every Republican on the ballot, place a cross in the circle in the second column marked Republican Party. Or if you wish to vote for every Democrat on the ticket, then mark a cross in the Democratic Party Circle. That's all there is to it.

On the other hand, suppose you wish to vote, as an example, a straight Republican ticket, with the exception of possibly one or two candidates on the Democrat side. In that case simply place a cross in the circle of the Republican column and then go across to the Democrat column and place a cross in the square in front of the Democrat candidate you wish to vote for. In that way you vote a straight Republican ticket with the exception of the Democrats whom you have voted for by marking the squares.

You Can Mark Each Square

You can disregard the circle entirely if you so wish, and vote by placing a cross in the square in front of every candidate you wish to vote for.

Do not make any other mark on the ballot. Do not sign your name. Such ballots are regarded as "spoiled" and are not counted.

Will Be Given Two Ballots

In addition to the general election ballot, you will also be given a special ballot on the county hospital question. The latter is simply a "yes" or "no" ballot and easily understood. If you think a county hospital is desirable, then put a cross mark in the square after the word "Yes." If you are against the proposition, then put a cross mark in the square following the word "No".

But whatever you do, be sure to vote on November 8th... next week. Support the men you think are going to serve your county and your state to the best interests of everyone.

Think before you vote!

Union Discussed Farm Matters

FARMERS UNION MEETING HELD AT LIBERTY SCHOOL

Regular meeting of the Farmers Union Local No. 1358 was held at Liberty No. 7 schoolhouse Tuesday evening, Nov. 1.

Due to the inclement weather the attendance was smaller than usual. The secretary read two letters issued by the Farmers' Washington Service. One item covered was Wallace's meeting at Springfield, Illinois. To quote "Mr. Wallace spoke to about 5,000 persons at the new armory in Springfield on the 14th. Of the 5,000 at least 4,800 present were AAA county and state committeemen—about three from each of the 1600 communities in the state. The county and township committeemen were instructed by their superiors to attend. They were advised that they would be allowed an extra day's pay ($4.50) for this "work"—a total of about $21,600 for the meeting. So, for the most part, it was a meeting of his own employees."

Roosevelt's genealogical chart, as prepared by the Carnegie Institute of Washington, D. C., was discussed by Ruby Wacker.

Lunch was served by the committee.

Fire Department Made Fast Trip

FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED TO JOHN DAY HOME THURS. BY SMALL ROOF BLAZE

The Klemmme Fire Department made a fast trip to the John Day home Thursday morning at 9:15 o'clock, being called there when an alarm was turned in.

Leaves had gathered on the roof between the chimney and a lightning rod wire and when the furnace fire was started evidently sparks ignited the leaves causing shingles to catch afire.

The blaze was seen by Herman Paul from the filling station a block west and he turned in the alarm. The blaze was easily extinguished and little damage was caused. A hole about two feet square was burned in the roof.

More than 100,000 students—nearly a fifth of the total public school enrollment in Iowa—attend one-room rural schools.

Miss Etchen was also congratulated in a letter from Frank Senneff in which he stated: "I congratulate you most heartily and want you to know that we are, indeed, pleased with the answers given by you and very much pleased that you won. There was a very large number from which to choose and you should feel complimented that your's was selected."

Rural Teachers Entertain Pupils At Hallowe'en Party

The Misses Ruth and Nora Wellemeyer, who teach rural schools east of Klemmme, invited the children from both schools to a Hallowe'en party at the Wellemeyer residence last Saturday evening. Ghosts, witches, black cats and Jack 'O' Lanterns were in evidence everywhere and a basement room was decorated with corn shocks and lighted with a dozen pumpkin lanterns. The floor was strewn with leaves from the trees, to give the proper setting for ghost stories, bobbing for apples, etc. The evening was full of surprises and the children enjoyed the games and lunch.

FISH DO NOT HEAR

Fish do not hear, they feel sound according to Talbot Denmead, Chief of the Black Bass and Anglers Division of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries.

"We can make all the noise we want to on land while we're fishing," says Denmead, "and the fish won't become frightened because they can't hear. But, if we crack an oar against the side of a boat, it frightens the fish because it sets up a vibration in the water."

"I guess the old theory about not talking or making any noise while fishing was just started by some fellow that didn't want to take his wife fishing with him," Denmead said in explanation of the ancient belief.

An explorer says that wolf meat is very nourishing. And we've had a good meal on our doorstep all this time without knowing it.

Huge U. S. Armament Program Offered as Peace Safeguard

By Joseph W. La Bine

Defense

Though the Munich agreement was aimed to preserve Europe's peace, its immediate result has been feverish rearmament. Great Britain has made plans for conscription and new airplane factories; France has appropriated 1,320,000,000 francs for military spending and 887,000,000 more for her navy; Germany is rushing fortification of her Belgian frontier; Italy speeds barriers in the Alps.

Few Americans have hoped that the U. S. can avoid similar preparations. Loudest persuasion of all has come from Britain's Winston Churchill, whose short wave broadcast urged the U. S. to take a commanding lead against dictators, to join Britain in stopping "isms" before it is too late. Added impetus has come from current U. S. espionage investigations (see DOMESTIC).

BERNARD BARUCH
He wanted billions for defense.

Growing louder, this voice finally reached White House ears, coincidentally bringing comment from Capitalist Bernard Baruch who charmaned the war industries board in 1917.

Emerging from a White House conference, Mr. Baruch started observers thinking by warning that U. S. defenses were inadequate. Though most Americans regard "defense" as successful repulsion of a North American invasion, a broader conception calls for protection of the entire Western hemisphere. Mr. Baruch's defense program includes: (1) immediate construction of a "two ocean navy"; (2) increased air power; (3) better equipment for 400,000 regular soldiers and the national guard; (4) subsidies to protect U. S. trade interests in South America; (5) industrial and military mobilization law; (6) a special tax to pay for these expenses.

Though it lacks official confirmation, President Roosevelt plainly favors the Baruch program. The suggested tax boost comes dangerously near election time, but administration leaders minimize this political hazard because: (1) most Americans regard democracy's security as more important than financial security or political partisanship; (2) a speeded-up military and naval program, financed by special tax, would decrease relief rolls and possibly create what Germany has been facing, an actual shortage of labor. Thus WPA and PWA costs could be slashed and the budget balanced.

War

Japan's invasion of South China has three purposes: (1) to force withdrawal of Cantonese troops from the Hankow battle front; (2) to capture Canton or force that province into an independent peace; (3) to cut the Hankow-Canton railroad over which war supplies have traveled to sorely troubled Chinese troops. But since China has already established four other communication lines between the outer world and her army, the South China invasion becomes less important to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Far more important is the fact that Japan has labeled herself the No. 1 Far East power, invading Great Britain's South China interests and defying the British lion to do anything about it. Canton lies a scant 75 miles from the crown colony of Hongkong, whose rail connection with Canton has already been broken. Since Hongkong's prosperity depends largely on trade with Canton, the British have reason to worry.

Closer home, U. S. officials are also worried because most American-Chinese trade is now routed through Hongkong. Though U. S. trade with Hongkong has jumped from $6,500,000 to $15,000,000 this year, largely because of the Canton gateway, total exports to China have dropped from $42,000,000 to $26,000,000. The American Philippines are also suffering, since Philippine-Canton trade has been heavy. Moreover, the U. S. will be unable to re-point much of its Chinese trade through the new gateways, two of them through Indo-China, one through Burma and a fourth through Russia.

Her ambitions and confidence fattened by Great Britain's capitulation at Munich, Japan marches forward to what she hopes will be domination of the Pacific.

Two fighting tigers will join forces to kill a common enemy. In much the same fashion, Loyalist and Insurgent Spain have protested the whispered proposal that Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany join in stopping her civil war. To Loyalist Premier Juan Negrin this is a particularly righteous attitude, for settlement of the war would almost certainly give his government the beggar's lot. Friendly with dominant Italy and Germany, Rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco would get the lion's share of Spain. Nevertheless, despite their belligerent attitudes, both sides have co-operated in ridding the war of foreign nationals. Ever since the Munich agreement, Italian troops have been slowly withdrawn, while all Loyalist foreigners are already gone. Thus isolated and warring without the active blessing of any outside power, Spain's civil war will probably blow up in a few months, ended by a sudden decision that the long struggle has been quite futile after all.

Domestic

Inescapably connected with the government's new emphasis on military defense against Nazi-Fascist world powers is President Roosevelt's interest in espionage. For 20 years the U. S. has disregarded spies, though the increasing frequency of arrests has made Americans fearful of Germany, Italy, Japan and Russia. Heightening the tension have been: (1) the Munich agreement which placed democracies on the defensive; (2) arrest in mid-October of four Germans taking photographs in the Canal Zone; (3) trial in New York of four alleged Nazi agents, with coincident efforts to prove indictments against 14 others who escaped the spy net and fled to Germany.

Greatest interest in the espionage trial lies in red-haired, 26-year-old Johanna Hoffman, who reportedly transported spy messages from New York to Germany while serving as hairdresser on the liner Europa. Second interest lies in Guenther Gustav Rumrich, former U. S. army sergeant who deserted and made a blundering attempt to secure 35 passport blanks last June. Legitimacy of U. S. fears was verified when Rumrich pleaded guilty and turned state's witness.

Though New York's spy trial appears commonplace, its significance is tremendous. Not only does it mark an emboldened U. S. defense attitude, but legal experts also explain it is the first time America has named a supposedly friendly power (Germany) in direct charges. Since indictments are filed against heads of the German secret service and naval intelligence, the trial is a potential international dynamite keg.

It may be predicted that next winter's congress will co-ordinate and tighten the government's outmoded

JOHANNA HOFFMAN
Was hairdressing a sideline?

anti-spy regulations, including the espionage act of 1917 which applies only to individuals and carries no teeth against spy-inspiring organizations. Although the U. S. has never indulged in peacetime spy activities, there is speculation whether congress may adopt this activity which has been an important European governmental function for 300 years.

Quotes

MAHATMA GANDHI, Indian home rule leader, on Czechoslovakia: "It is clear that small nations must come, or be ready to come, under the protection of dictators or be a constant menace to European peace."

DR. STANLEY HIGH, publicist, on a Roosevelt third term: "Nobody ever in the White House, with the exception perhaps of Theodore Roosevelt, enjoyed it so much."

MARY PICKFORD, onetime actress, on new upstart hairdresser: "One must marry a hairdresser to keep the new high coiffure in perfect order."

International

The U. S. has long maintained splendid trade relations with Western hemisphere nations, has more-over done this without resorting to heavy armaments. Until five years ago the U. S. was similarly strong in China. Reason: European and Asiatic nations have always been busy at home, not daring to risk invasion of the Western hemisphere.

But since Japan became supreme in the Far East, the U. S. has been forced to expand her Pacific fleet. If this was cause for worry, a much greater cause is the Munich pact which sheared friendly France and Britain of their power. Dominant in Europe, anxious to increase their foreign trade, Italy and Germany can now be regarded as a serious threat to U. S. commerce. Of the two, Germany will be a greater threat because she has adopted an aggressive foreign expansion program, moreover because her new Sudeten territorial acquisitions bring glassware, leather and textiles into the Reich for export sale.

Focal point of German expansion will be Latin America, which last year gave the Reich 14 per cent of its trade, compared with 34.7 per cent to the U. S. In this trade war, it has become apparent the U. S. will attempt to sell South Americans on democracy, while Germany sells them Nazism. Today, as the war gets under way, the U. S. appears to hold an upper hand.

Long favored in South America through her Monroe doctrine, the U. S. has just helped preserve Western hemisphere peace by joining in settlement of the 100-year-old Chaco dispute between Paraguay and Bolivia. Indirectly, the U. S. could place another feather in her cap when Brazil called home its ambassador to Berlin, apparently breaking off diplomatic relations with the Reich. This is President Getulio Vargas' answer to Chancellor Hitler's efforts for Brazilian Nazification.

Aiding the U. S. will be increased domestic desire to woo South America. Already a campaign is under way to boost our consumption of South American goods.

A natural result of this activity has been growing American disinclination to complete the long-pending U. S.-British trade pact, a sentiment resulting from the rebirth of isolationism which followed Munich's peace treaty. The greatest stumbling block is that isolationism calls for strengthened trade relations with Canada, a plan blocked by Great Britain's renewed efforts to tighten her dominion bonds. A U. S.-Canadian trade treaty is bound to hurt American agriculture; a U. S.-British treaty will hurt American manufacture. Therefore economists are betting the "most favored nation" agreements now pending with Canada and Britain will never be consummated.

Meanwhile, Germany is cocksure of her position. Busily flitting from one European capital to another, Economics Minister Walter Funk has completed bilateral accords based on barter of goods with several Balkan states. In this way the Reich hopes to increase its economic orbit. But when Minister Funk optimistically announced he would next attempt a barter treaty with the U. S., state department officials made it clear that optimism is unfounded.

Races

Though Arabs hoped Great Britain would give them Palestine for helping defeat Turkey in the World war, Lord Balfour's declaration ended an establishment of a national home for Jews in the Holy Land. Bitter Arab-Jewish strife has resulted since 1923, while world Jewry has invested $385,000,000 and sent home 400,000 Hebrews to the "promised land." Today, encouraged by Franco-British weakness in the face of Jew-hating Germany and Italy, Arabs are rising again. Determined to settle the problem, Britain's Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain is reportedly considering restriction of Jewish migration to the Holy Land, or even complete return of Palestine to the Arabs. If Britain does either, she will arouse world protest, which is already rising among influential U. S. and British Jews. Before Britain can vacate the Balfour declaration, she should get U. S. assent, which is not apt to be forthcoming. To go ahead without that nod of approval would mean a serious strain of U. S.-British friendship, something which England needs badly right now.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Correct Diet for Cool Weather; Explains How to Keep Warm and Well

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

MANY people look upon fall weather with foreboding. They cannot observe leaves on the ground without a feeling of vague uneasiness—and the sight of brown and barren fields fills them with desolation.

This, I think, is a throwback to an earlier day when the advent of cool weather foretold long months of bitterly cold days in draughty, inadequately heated houses. And the lack of adequate heat was only one of many difficulties. The principal reason for fearing cold weather is another heritage from the past.

Limited Diet of an Earlier Day

There was a time within memory of many of us when the terms "cold-weather diet" and "warm-weather diet" had real meaning. Winter food differed a great deal from summer food, particularly in the absence of fresh fruits and vegetables, and in the restricted use of milk, and milk products.

The limited diet of winter was enforced by conditions of that period. Methods of production, transportation, refrigeration and storage of foods, which are commonplace today, were then unknown.

Fruits and vegetables were consumed when and where they were grown, and when cold weather prevented their growth, they were not available. The canning industry was young and the grocery store in cold weather presented a far different appearance from the modern food store in which the shelves are lined, row upon row, with shining cans of the finest fruits and vegetables to be found anywhere in the world, plus an amazing assortment of prepared milks.

It was an accepted fact that fruits, vegetables, and the generous use of milk belonged to the summer months, while in winter everyone ate an unbalanced diet. As a result of lacking these essential protective foods, health went down rapidly from late fall to early spring.

The winter diet was deficient in minerals and vitamins, which science has proven to be the protectors of health, barriers against disease, sustainers of life. But in those days, vitamins were unknown and very little had been learned about minerals. Therefore, when people became ill during cold weather, the natural conclusion was that sickness was inevitable during the winter season.

Cold Weather Really a Tonic

Times have changed. Scientific knowledge has increased. The genius of man has asserted itself in mechanical advancement. The expressions, "cold-weather diet" and "warm-weather diet," have lost their former meaning.

Almost without exception, the protective foods are available throughout the year, no matter where we live.

It is therefore possible to protect the health by a balanced diet all the year 'round, and to benefit by the tonic effect of cold weather. For, contrary to popular belief, cold weather is beneficial, and not harmful, to healthy people.

Cold speeds up all the activities of the body. The circulation is improved, muscle tone is increased, and digestion, absorption and elimination are stimulated. Even prolonged cold is thus a tonic to health, provided we do not weaken our bodies by an unbalanced diet.

It is partly because so many people continue to eat improperly, in spite of our newer knowledge of nutrition, that we still find an increasing amount of sickness in the fall, which mounts steadily until it reaches its peak in the months of January, February and March.

Dangers of an Improper Diet

Yet winter need have no terrors for the fit. Only the weak, the unfit, surrender and become its victims. That the number of victims is large each winter merely indicates how many people neglect their health through careless living, and especially through careless eating.

Measures to protect one's self against the attack of winter should be taken during the summer and early fall. A sturdy resistance against the ills of winter should be built up by means of a balanced diet which assures an abundant supply of the minerals and vitamins.

When a person is undernourished or improperly nourished, he is denied of every defense. He is chilled by the slightest drop in temperature. He offers fertile soil for every kind of disease germs. He can neither resist their invasion, nor fight them off after they have attacked.

Thus, the first rule for keeping warm and well in winter is to live and eat in a manner that helps to maintain health and strength. The correct winter diet differs in one important respect—and one only—from the correct diet at other seasons.

More Fuel Foods Required

As a rule, people are more energetic in cold weather and it is therefore necessary to increase the amount of energy-producing foods. Nearly all children, and adults who spend much of their time out doors, should consume more high caloric foods which may be provided in the form of easily digested carbohydrates, such as rice, macaroni, spaghetti, noodles, potatoes, cereals and breadstuffs.

In the case of adults, the amount of fats may also be increased and in some circumstances, more sweets may likewise be taken.

To summarize, the cold weather diet should include a quart of milk daily for every child, a pint for each adult; two fruits daily, or one fruit and one fruit juice—and while one serving may be a dried fruit, such as prunes, apricots or figs, there should be one serving of a citrus fruit, or tomatoes, to

Your Health May Depend on Your Teeth

An Editorial by C. Houston Goudiss

The reason why some men and women in their middle years look and feel younger today than their parents did at the same age, is because they have learned something of the importance of caring properly for their teeth. In recent years, dentists have discovered that sound teeth are in truth a passport to good health, and that there is as close a relationship between healthy teeth and healthy bodies as between decayed teeth and sickly bodies.

Unfortunately, however, only a small percentage of our population is yet aware of the far-reaching effects of teeth upon health, and a distinguished scientist is so disturbed over our national ignorance in this respect that he has said that unless this trend is reversed, the course of human evolution will lead downward to extinction. That statement is no exaggeration. For it would be difficult to over-estimate the influence of the teeth on human health and happiness.

For many years I have endeavored to explain that a neglected tooth—which soon becomes a decayed tooth—is a poison factory, distributing its noxious products to every part of the body, and that it may lead indirectly to neuritis, rheumatic ailments, dyspepsia, and other obscure complaints.

In many of the "WHAT TO EAT AND WHY" articles, which have appeared in this newspaper over my signature, I have endeavored to point out the close relationship between diet and dental disease; between frequent and thorough brushing of the teeth with an efficient dentifrice so as to remove all food particles, and strong, beautiful teeth.

As a result of these articles, I have received many letters, showing that homemakers are eager for sound, authoritative advice on the proper care of the teeth. To help these and other readers how to properly care for their teeth, I have prepared a booklet on—"BUILDING AND PLANNING HEALTH" which I am offering FREE, because I feel so strongly that this information should be in every home, knowing as I do, that the salvation of the human race may lie in saving their teeth.

Ample Precaution—Hence Little Concern

Adeline Genee, famous dancer, now retired, tells this story: Two young ladies—nongolfers—who wandered over a golf course and, finding a nice smooth bit of turf with a little flag in the center, sat down to rest. A couple of men in the distance shouted "fore" and madly waved their arms, but not having been introduced, the ladies took no notice. Soon one of the men came striding up. "Don't you think it's very dangerous to sit here?" he asked gravely. "Oh, no," replied one of the ladies, with a smile. "You see, we're sitting on a mackintosh."—Kansas City Star.

provide vitamin C; two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the green, leafy variety, either fresh or canned; an egg daily, or at least three or four weekly; one daily serving of meat, fish or chicken, and a second protein food such as cheese, dried peas or beans or nuts; and enough of the fuel foods including whole grain cereals, to keep the body warm and comfortable.

If you eat correctly and dress sensibly so that you are neither too warmly clad indoors nor too thinly clad out of doors, you can enjoy cold weather and benefit by it to the extent of increased health and happiness.

Mrs. F. L. B.—Egg white is a solution of pure protein. The egg yolk contains minerals, vitamins and fats, in addition to protein.

Miss C. M. R.—In general, whole raw fruits, especially those with skins and seeds, provide a slightly harsher residue than that of cooked fruits, or the pulp of raw fruits with skin and seeds removed.

Americans Will Join in Paying Tribute to Their Favorite Fruit

During the Celebration of National Apple Week, October 31 to November 5, They'll Sing the Praises of Its Many Varieties and Recall Once More the Story of Its "Patron Saint," the Queer Frontier Character Who Was Known as "Johnny Appleseed."

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"AN APPLE a day keeps the doctor away." So runs the old familiar saying and it will probably be repeated often during the week of October 31 to November 5. It's not because there's any concerted movement on to disparage our M. D.s and try to make it more difficult for them to earn a living. But the seven days between those two dates have been designated as National Apple week, during which time Americans will be urged to eat more of this supposedly health-giving fruit.

Whether eating apples does or doesn't make a person healthier, it will have little effect upon our interest in the observance. For among all the "weeks" which we are called upon to "observe" (usually for commercial reasons), few have more sentimental appeal than National Apple week. There are a number of reasons for this, among them these:

If ever America decides to choose a "national fruit," the chances are that the apple will be the leading contender for that honor. It's the one fruit which we can, and do, eat virtually the whole year 'round. Take a poll of American men on their favorite dessert and the chances are that the majority of them will say "apple pie!" without hesitation. Apple cider was the favorite beverage of our pioneering fathers (it helped elect William Henry Harrison President during the exciting "hard cider-log cabin" campaign of 1840) and it's still a favorite, especially at this time of the year.

If National Apple week needs "a patron saint," it won't have to look far to find one. You've guessed his name, of course—Johnny Appleseed!

The real name of this queer genius of the American frontier was John Chapman. He was born near Leominster, Mass., on September 26, 1774, the son of Nathaniel Chapman, who served in a company of Minute Men at the outbreak of the Revolution and who moved westward to Springfield, Mass., after the death of his wife in 1776.

His Wanderings Begin.

In 1793 Nathaniel Chapman was drowned while fishing in the Connecticut river near South Hadley Falls and soon afterwards Johnny's wanderings began. Johnny is said to have packed his meager personal belongings, walked down to the town clerk's office, where he left instructions that his father's cabin be given to the most needy family in Springfield, and started for the West.

"JOHNNY APPLESEED"

He reached Pittsburgh in 1794, established himself on a farm there, and planted an orchard. From that period in his life dated his name of Johnny Appleseed. To emigrants, floating down the Ohio on their way to new homes in the West, Johnny Appleseed became a familiar figure. He would invariably present each family with a package of apple seeds and urge them to plant them as soon as they had found them as soon as they had found them as soon as they had found them.

In 1799 Johnny appeared as a wanderer in the valley of the Potomac. In the summer of 1800 he was again in western Pennsylvania and in the fall of that year he appeared on the banks of the Ohio river near the present site of Steubenville. He was starting out as the advance guard of the wave of pioneer settlement which was pouring into the fertile Ohio valleys. Johnny's idea was to plant his apple seeds so that the trees would be growing when the settlers arrived.

The chronology of Johnny's life from this point on is somewhat uncertain. It is known that he established a nursery at Marietta, Ohio, and that he used this place as the base for his operations. He wandered from place to place in that state, planting his seeds and caring for the trees already growing.

The Fort Vancouver Apple Tree.

To Cider Mills for Seeds.

Frequently he revisited the cider mills of Pennsylvania and Ohio to get more seeds which he would wash free of pulp, sort and sew into deerskin bags. These bags he presented to emigrants as they continued to penetrate the farther regions of the rich Mississippi valley, and some of these tiny bags are still the treasured possessions of descendants of the pioneers who profited by Johnny's bounty.

Johnny started four nurseries in Ohio. They were situated near the present cities of Mansfield, Ashland, Salem and Delaware. He is said to have established more than a hundred sub-nurseries in various parts of the Ohio valley, and there is no way of telling how many thousands of fruit trees he started during the course of his 40 years of wandering. As Ohio began to settle up he spent more and more of his time farther west in Indiana and Illinois, and it is more than likely that he crossed the Mississippi into Missouri and that some of the orchards in that state owe their origin to this queer genius.

With nothing more than an ax, a hatchet and a hoe he would seek out a protected spot among the trees near a stream and there dig up the soil until it was thoroughly pulverized. Then he would plant thousands of apple, peach and pear seeds and build a brush fence around the infant nursery to keep away deer and other grazing animals. When the settlers arrived they had only to dig up the apple seedlings and replant them, when they had established their homes, to start an orchard. Johnny planted other things besides apple trees in the wilderness. Small fruit such as grapes and berries he scattered through the forests.

Johnny's Death.

Johnny's wanderings came to an end in 1843 when he died in the home of a friend, William Worth, in Fort Wayne, Ind. He was buried in what was known as the Archer burying ground near that city. For many years his grave was neglected and it seemed that Johnny Appleseed was about to be forgotten by a generation who knew little of his labors in their behalf.

Then in 1912 the Indiana Horticultural society and the Ohio Horticultural society decided that it was time to take action and save Johnny Appleseed's name and fame from being utterly lost. The burying ground where he slept was known, but the exact location of his grave was uncertain. Pioneer residents of the town. Pioneer residents of the town. Pioneer residents of the town.

A monument to honor his memory was later placed in the Fort Wayne city park. Other monuments in his honor were erected in Mansfield, Ohio, and in Ashland, Ohio, but more appropriate is the memorial, sponsored by the Springfield, Mass., Garden club and established a few years ago. It is a four-acre tract of land, which may have once belonged to his father and over which he undoubtedly roamed as a boy. In it have been planted a wide variety of the sturdy old New England varieties of apples which Johnny spread broadcast throughout the East and the Old North-west.

Almost as interesting as these memorials to the man who did so much to plant apple trees all over the Middle West are some of the monuments to apple trees themselves. In Wilmington, Mass., stands a monument on which is inscribed "This pillar marks the estate where the Baldwin apple tree was discovered by Sam'l Thompson in 1793. Erected 1895." Thompson, according to the story, discovered the first Pecker apple tree (later named the Baldwin) while locating the line of the Middlesex canal and the monument honoring his discovery was erected by the Rumford Historical association a hundred years later, after the Baldwin had become one of the most popular apples in New England.

A similar monument stands in the village of Dunela, near Abbotsford, in Quebec. It honors the McIntosh apple, discovered by Allen McIntosh as a chance seedling which he spared while clearing the brush on the site he had chosen for his home. This seedling apple, at first called a Grany, was later named for its discoverer and preserver. The original tree lived for 112 years and was destroyed by fire in 1908 when a house near it was burned.

An Historic Apple Tree.

Another apple tree with an equal record of longevity is the historic tree which stands in a little plot of ground in Vancouver Barracks, Vancouver, Wash., and which still bears fruit every year. Near it is a sign that says: "Oldest apple tree in the Northwest—grown from seed brought from London, England, and planted in 1826 by the Hudson's Bay Company."

As a matter of fact it was planted by Robert Bruce, the venerable Scotch gardener employed by Dr. John McLoughlin, who, as factor for the H. B. C., once ruled over an empire of 400,000 square miles and won for himself the title of "Emperor of the West" as well as that of the "Father of Oregon." While McLoughlin was factor at Fort Vancouver he was visited by Capt. Aemilius Simpson of the British navy. One evening at dinner, Simpson was reminded by one of his men of a promise he had made a certain young lady back in London. At a farewell banquet this girl had taken the seeds from an apple she was eating and presented them to Simpson, asking him to plant them when he reached his destination in the Pacific coast wilderness. Simpson had forgotten the incident until reminded of it by his aide. He reached in his coat pocket and found the packet of seeds resting under his white kid gloves. He immediately presented them to McLoughlin and from one of those seeds grew the tree which still bears fruit each year.

Still bearing fruit also is another century-old veteran which stands clear across the continent from the Vancouver apple tree. This is the famous Marshfield Hills apple tree on the shores of Cape Cod bay in Massachusetts. It is 30 feet high, 10 feet in circumference and every spring it looks like a 60-foot ball of white and pink blossoms supported by huge limbs nearly six feet in girth.

Monument to Johnny Appleseed in Fort Wayne, Ind.

It was John Burroughs, one of America's best beloved writers on nature subjects, who wrote a charming essay on "The Apple-Eater" which is worth recalling during National Apple week. He said:

"Do you remember the apple-hole in the garden or back of the house, Ben Bolt? In the fall after the bins in the cellar had been well stocked, we excavated a circular pit in the warm mellow earth, and covering the bottom with clean rye straw, emptied in basketful after basketful of hardy choice varieties, till there was a tent-shaped mound several feet high of shining, variegated fruit. Then wrapping it about with a thick layer of longer rye straw, and tucking it up snug and warm, the mound was covered with a thin coating of earth, a flat stone on the top holding down the straw. As winter set in, another coating of earth was put upon it and the precious pile was left in silence and darkness till spring. . . .

Buried Treasure.

"As the supply in the bins and barrels gets low and spring approaches the buried treasures in the garden are remembered. With spade and ax we go out and penetrate through the snow and frozen earth till the inner dressing of straw is laid bare. It is not quite as clear and bright as when we placed it there last fall, but the fruit beneath, which the hand soon exposes, is just as bright and far more luscious. Then, as day after day you resort to the hole, and removing the straw and earth from the opening thrust your arm into the fragrant pit, you have a better chance than ever before to become acquainted with your favorites by the sense of touch. How you feel for them, reaching to the right and left!

"Now you have got a Tolman sweet; you imagine you can feel that single meridian line that divides it into two hemispheres. Now a greening fills your hand; you feel its fine quality beneath its rough coat. Now you have hooked a Swaar, you recognize its full face; now a Vendevore or a King rolls down from the apex above and you bag it at once.

"When you were a schoolboy you stowed these away in your pockets and ate them along the road and at recess, and again at noon-time and they, in a measure, corrected the effects of the cake and pie with which your indulgent mother filled your lunch-basket. The boy is indeed the true apple-eater, and is not to be questioned how he came by the fruit with which his pockets are filled. It belongs to him, and he may steal it if it cannot be had in any other way. His own juicy flesh craves the juicy flesh of the apple. Sap draws sap. His fruit-eating has little reference to the state of his appetite. Whether he be full of meat or empty of meat, he wants the apple just the same. Before meal or after meal it never comes amiss. He has nests of them in the hay-mow, mellowing, to which he makes frequent visits. Sometimes old Brindle, having access through the open door, smells them out and makes short work of them.

"The apple is indeed the fruit of youth. As we grow old we crave apples less. It is an ominous sign. When you are ashamed to be seen eating them on the street; when you can carry them in your pocket and your hand not constantly find its way to them; when your neighbor has apples and you have none, and you make no nocturnal visits to his orchard; when your lunch-basket is without them and you can pass a winter's night by the fireside with no thought of the fruit at your elbow, then be assured you are no longer a boy, in heart or years.

"The genuine apple-eater comforts himself with an apple in their season as others with a pipe or cigar. When he has nothing else to do, or is bored, he eats an apple. While he is waiting for the train he eats an apple, sometimes several of them. When he takes a walk he arms himself with apples. His traveling-bag is full of apples. He offers an apple to his companion, and takes one himself. They are his chief solace on the road. He sows their seed all along the route. He tosses the core from the car-window and from the top of the stage-coach. He would, in time, make the land one vast orchard."

Pretty Clothes That You Can Work In

SHOWN here is a house dress designed for large women. Every line of this simple dress is made for comfort and good looks. Ample armholes, a waist that looks slim but is thoroughly unconfined, a skirt wide enough to climb and to hurry in—all assure you complete freedom for working. The front fastening makes it easy to iron as well as to put on. The v-neck adds to the slenderizing effect of the long, plain lines. Contrasting cuffs with a touch of braid brighten it up, effectively.

A diagram design, to be finished in a few hours. Make it of gingham, percale or calico.

Jumper Dress for School Girls.

This is an unusually good version of the always-smart jumper. It has such a nice, tiny waist, the skirt flares bee-yu-tifully, and the straps are so fixed that they won't fall off at the shoulders. Make several versions of the sweet little blouse, with its round collar and high-shouldered sleeves, in dimity, linen, organdy or flowered challis. One jumper, many blouses, make it easy to have a fresh outfit always ready for school. For the skirt, choose challis, jersey or flannel.

The Patterns.

No. 1623 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5½ yards of 35-inch material; ½ yard contrasting for cuffs and pocket; 1¼ yards of braid.

No. 1520 is designed for sizes 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1½ yards of 35-inch material for the blouse; 1½ yards of 54-inch material for the jumper.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents. Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. VOTE REPUBLICAN

Hancock county and Iowa voters will step to the polls Tuesday, November 8, to cast their votes for their favorite candidates.

Iowa, as a whole, is normally a Republican state. Hancock county has always favored a Republican ticket. Voters are urged to vote a straight Republican ticket and return Iowa to the Republican side of politics.

Only the election of a Republican congress, state and county administration will give industry the "go ahead" signal it needs to again create private jobs.

Republican congressmen are pledged to oppose all further increase in the national debt which has jumped seventeen billion dollars in the last five years. Further increases mean that all of us, no matter how poor, may be paying Income Taxes soon.

The New Deal began with twelve million unemployed. Today, five years later, there are still twelve

The New Deal program has crippled business instead of aiding it to recover. Under five years of New Deal policies, labor has lost millions of hours of work, billions of dollars. The Republican party aims at the restoraion of labor... private jobs.

Republicans want the Social Security Law amended to safeguard the tremendous sums that all of us pay into the national treasury, and to prevent it from being spent as general revenue.

Think before you vote! Vote Republican from the governor on down to the township republican candidates!

I-S-A-S

There will be plenty of time for everyone to vote next Tuesday. The various voting places in the county open at eight in the morning and close at eight at night.

I-S-A-S

And speaking of politics, last week one of Garner's staunch democrats took in the rally at Britt and heard Gov. Kraschel expound the fine work of the Democrats. That same evening the staunch Garner Democrat took in the Republican rally at which Hickenlooper told all the fine things the Republicans proposed to do. The staunch Garner Democrat scratched his head and was heard to mutter: "Somebody's a damn liar!"

NO HENS

The laws which provide an open pheasant season on November 12th, 13th and 14th also provide that only three male birds may be taken in any one day by any one person. No hens may be lawfully shot.

There will be mistakes, but the law does not allow for them. Conservation authorities believe that there can be little excuse for mistaken identity of these birds if every person shooting would hesitate only an instant before pulling the trigger.

When the male pheasant gets up from the ground it often "cackles" but the long tail and bright colored feathers are the chief identification marks. There is a vast difference in color, size and general appearance between the male and female of this species and every hunter is urged to learn that difference before opening the season on November 12th.

Solomon Island Natives

Vigorous and Fighters

The Solomons are a group of seven large and a great number of smaller islands, stretching over about 800 miles in the Pacific ocean east of New Guinea. Most of them are rough and mountainous, and covered with dense tropical forests, writes Albert B. Lewis in Field Museum News.

The natives form a part of the Melanesian group of peoples, all of whom speak languages also known as Melanesian. These are fundamentally related in a grammatical sense, but differ greatly in vocabulary.

The Solomon Islanders are vigorous and warlike, but are compelled to keep the peace except in the interior of one or two of the larger islands. Many of them were formerly head-hunters and cannibals, and often made raids on their neighbors, using large high-built war canoes 40 to 50 feet long, capable of carrying 25 or more men. Clubs and spears were the principal weapons, but bows and arrows were used in some places.

The natives are of medium height, but vary considerably. In the western end of the group they are rather tall, somewhat negroid in appearance, with kinky, black hair and a very dark or sooty-black skin. The eastern islanders are somewhat smaller, of a lighter, chocolate-brown color, with curly or wavy hair. It is evident that in the Solomons, as in all other Melanesian islands, there is an underlying Oceanic negroid or Papuan type mixed to a greater or lesser degree with Indonesian or Malayan immigrants.

For food the natives are largely dependent on their gardens, taro being the most important foodstuff. Other vegetables are used to some extent, but taro is the basis of nearly every meal, with fish, shrimp or meat (chiefly pork) being added when obtainable. The natives are very fond of the milk and meat of the unripe coconut, to obtain which they must climb the coconut palms.

"Easterling" Word Used to Denote Real Quality

After the Romans left Britain, coinage was in chaos for several centuries, writes Alice H. Coutant in the American Collector. Coins were of all shapes and sizes. Quality and weight of silver varied greatly and the practice of clipping coins, although punishable by death, was common. Toward the middle of the Thirteenth century, a number of north German merchants came to England and formed a guild in London. They made their own coins which soon became notable for honesty of weight and fine quality.

Called "Easterlings," probably because of the geographical position of the country where they originated the term soon applied to their coins as well. Then, by the end of the century, it had been shortened to sterling and this, derived from the name given to the honest product of honest men, became the accepted term for the alloy which has been of such a high standard in England for more than 600 years.

Sterling silver is an alloy of 925 parts pure silver in 1,000. This standard, decreed by King Edward I in the year 1300, has been adhered to ever since, except for a few years when an even higher standard prevailed. No other country holds such a record.

Gorge Sees Only Noon Sun

Only at midday does the sun ever peep into the bottom of Indian pass, that narrow, mile-long gorge cut deep through solid rock between MacIntyre and Wallace mountains in the heart of the Adirondack wilderness a few miles southeast of Lake Placid. Called by the Indians "Henodowda," the Path of the Thunderer, Indian pass is one of the scenic marvels of the Adirondacks. Its walls rise straight up over a thousand feet. On the western (Wallace) side the perpendicular rock face rears itself 1,300 feet into the air. Near the middle of the pass, high up on MacIntyre, are two small springs, so close together that their waters almost intermingle. Separating a few feet farther down, they flow on to the bottom of the pass in two little rivulets. One rivulet finds its way south to the headwaters of the Hudson river, while the other heads north where eventually its sparkling content mingles with the mighty St. Lawrence.

Mud, a Strange Export

One of Czechoslovakia's strangest exports is mud. The mud is of a very special quality, for it is that of Piestany and other famous spas and contains radium, silica, iron, calcium and other healing minerals. There, at Piestany, the mud, known as "fango," can be dried and made into cubes and poultices, without loss of its health-giving qualities. So dehydrated, it is exported all over the world for the treatment of rheumatism, gout, sciatica and other ailments. The greatest springs for the cures at Piestany rise on the bathing island in the River Vah. These well up through fissures in the rock strata, the water having a temperature of about 140 degrees.

Sermon Repeated for Sleepers

In older days clergymen preached long sermons and demanded more of their flock than do those of today. One such preacher had most of his audience asleep, but they all woke up toward the close and got ready for the closing service, when the preacher announced "that, as they were all awake, he would repeat his sermon, hoping now to be heard!"

GUN DEATHS CONTINUE

Fatalities due to guns while hunting continue to be reported despite warnings and gun-handling educational articles appearing in almost every newspaper and publication. The Conservation Commission, State Department of Health, Iowa Safety Council, and other state departments interested in the public's safety have published numerous articles on the danger of guns and the proper method of handling. Reports of gun deaths and injuries continue to be received and one of the most interesting points regarding most fatalities is that death was caused by a gun that was being handled in a manner which has been stressed in all safety publication as being the most dangerous.

Reports indicate that gun accidents occur chiefly from pulling a loaded gun barrel first from a boat or car or through a fence, pointing a loaded gun at a hunting companion, and not carrying a loaded gun in the right manner when hunting with others.

Conservation authorities state that one way to reduce such accidents is for the hunter to remember that every gun is loaded whether it is or not and should be handled, pointed and carried, with that thought in mind.

WATCH YOUR BIRD DOWN

While the pheasant season is to be opened this year after two years of closed season, there is no huge surplus of birds, say game authorities. There is a shootable surplus, but to take more than that surplus would be defeating the very purpose of Iowa's game program.

One suggested method of preserving the parent stock is to prevent waste by watching carefully the falling bird and marking the spot so as not to lose it. Hunters should make every effort to find every "down" bird and prevent waste. A good retriever dog will help preserve the parent stock more than anything else, say conservation officials.

Klemme School Band Appeared At Mason City School Event

The Klemme School Band, directed by Mr. Batchelder, were guests of the Mason City high school Friday evening when the Mason City high school played the East Waterloo high school football team. The Klemme School Band gave a marching exhibition between halves and were highly complimented on their fine work, both playing and marching.

Polishing Diamonds Is Done by Turning Wheel

The process of polishing diamonds has not changed for more than 300 years, with the exception of the manner of turning the wheel. At first this was done by hand, then by horse power, next by steam and later by electricity, notes a writer in the Washington Post.

The composition of the diamond wheel is a secret carefully guarded by those who possess it. It is said that no one in this country knows how to make it. During the war, when it was very difficult to obtain chemists tried in vain to discover the secret.

Experts have analyzed the materials and found that it is composed of a mixture of iron and steel in certain proportions, but after having got the proper constituents and constructed the wheel, they found that it would not cut the diamonds as it should.

It would cut a little but not enough to make it worth while to use it. It is thought that the secret of the diamond wheel lies in the method of cooling, but no one is sure.

This wheel, like good wine, grows better with age. This is because the diamond dust gets into the pores of the metal and makes it cut better.

The earliest records obtainable of the lapidary's art is mention of several cut diamonds among the treasure of Louis of Anjou toward the end of the Fourteenth century.

The method of brilliant cutting is generally ascribed to Louis de Berquem, of Bruges, who in 1475 cut several celebrated diamonds for Charles the Bold. From that time down toward the end of the last century the industry has been almost entirely connected with the history of Holland. Only within the past generation has any country been able to compete with her, and as yet only in quality of output and not in quantity.

St. Mary-le-Bow, London,

Gets Title From Arches

Bow church or St. Mary-le-Bow in Cheapside, London, derives its name from the stone arches, "bows," of its Norman crypt, built about 1090. The church was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren about 1680. The crypt probably is a relic of the church built in Norman times and is given in Baedeker as the oldest surviving ecclesiastical structure in the city of London. The church has long had one of the most celebrated bell-peals. John Dunmer, in 1472, gave two tenements to maintain the ringing of Bow bell every night at nine o'clock, to direct travelers on the road to town; and in 1520 William Copland gave a bigger bell for the purpose of "sounding a retreat from work."

The Bow bells are twelve in number, states a writer in the Detroit News, eight of which were recast in Whitechapel in 1762. According to legend, it was the sound of Bow bells which inspired the poor boy, Richard Whittington, in the Fourteenth century, to return to London and become its famous lord mayor.

In the Middle ages the term "cockney" was applied to a pampered child, a person petted and made effeminate by over indulgence. Later it was applied to city dwellers by country folk who scorned the soft habits of the town-bred. As in English eyes London was "the city," by 1600 the term cockney had become applicable solely to Londoners, and particularly those born within the sound of Bow bells, in the heart of London. As it would be difficult for anyone to claim birth in that region of city offices and warehouses, a cockney is anyone possessed of the London peculiarities of speech, etc.

Woman Saved Crown Jewels

When Cromwell was Lord Protector of England he sent an expedition to Scotland because the Scots had brought Charles II from exile in 1651 and crowned him. Cromwell also wanted the crown jewels. The wife of the pastor of the church at Kinross smuggled them through the British lines and her husband buried them in the walls of his church. They remained hidden until Scotland consented to a parliamentary union with England. One of the provisos of the agreement was, the jewels were never to leave the country. The jewels were taken to Edinburgh castle and have been on public view since 1817, which action was taken on orders of King George IV.

Minnows Related to Carp

Poor minnows! Because they're little, they're picked on. Cats eat 'em, fishermen catch them by the thousands for bait, and larger fish consider them a chief item of diet. The minnow, in turn, eats minute animal and plant life and gets back at the big fish by eating their eggs. Incidentally, minnows are all related to the carp. There are 200 species of minnows in North America. Their name comes from a common European-Indian word meaning "little," says a writer in the Washington Post.

Named for a Pioneer

Lassen peak, the southernmost in the Cascade range, elevation 10,453 feet, was named after Peter Lassen, a pioneer of the 1840s, says Nature Magazine. It dominates the topography of the area yet is easily accessible to a normally active person. A trail, two and one half miles in length, leads to the top of the mountain.

SCHOON FOR SUPERVISOR

Elsewhere in today's issue of this newspaper Frank J. Schoun is asking voters of Hancock County to support him in his race for supervisor for the 1939 term.

Mr Schoun deserves the support he asks, it seems to us, not only because he has an excellent personal record, but also because he served as supervisor in the past and at that time proved he was a man whose promise could be trusted.

His platform in the race he is now making is that he will work for the strictest economy in all county affairs and unbiased treatment for every citizen in the county, regardless of location or station.

Because he has spent his life in Hancock county and has been a successful farmer, Mr. Schoun is familiar with the business with which supervisors must most frequently deal in this county.

His experience in the work makes him all the more valuable as the logical man to be chosen at next Tuesday's general election

Hancock County Public Hospital

Because it is needed, there being no hospital in Hancock county.

Because it will save the county taxpayers much money that is now going outside for care of the poor.

Because it will be of great value in case of accidents and emergencies.

Because it will supply a humanitarian need to all people of moderate means, as well as a saving in transportation expenses and the expense involved in traveling to hospitals to see patients by the relatives and friends.

Because it will supply a place where doctors can take patients and give them better care than they can in many homes.

Because the Federal Government will supply one-half the cost of construction—$24,285.00 already having been approved. This money has been appropriated by Congress and will be spent somewhere else if not here.

Because there is nothing of a public nature that will serve all county citizens—property owning taxpayers, renters, and all classes, as well as a public hospital.

Because it will be open to all doctors of the county, who can bring in outside surgeons when necessary.

Because the best authorities claim that 85 percent of the hospital cases in Hancock county can be handled here.

There has been no expense to the county thus far:

The preliminary work on this project was undertaken by a committee of men and women of the Britt community. All expenses have been borne by private contributions. But when this is voted it becomes a county property

OWNED AND OPERATED BY HANCOCK COUNTY

A board of nine members, selected from all parts of the county, serving without pay, will administer its affairs. A modern, fire-proof, well equipped hospital will produce good surgeons the same as it has at Forest City, Belmond, Hampton and other towns where hospitals are located.

Vote "Yes" On November 8

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK. — Barring champion prizefighters, Thomas E. Dewey probably has more publicity than any American of 36, but almost everything about him is old news. He is a Republican nominated for governor, the whole country seems to be waiting for information about the set of his suspenders, whether he runs down the heel of his shoes. Friends from the and Far West have told me, some have written, that they more talk about Thomas E. Dewey for President than about all other possibilities put together. These informants say the tall, not partisan — that New York young racket-buster is becoming national symbol of a "happy out of all our afflictions."

This reporter hereby hands him the agrarian vote: on the banks of the Shawnee, near Owosso, in the state of Michigan, he was a demon cow milker. People would come for miles to see and hear him milk a cow. Musically gifted, he could make the powerful milk stream ring like a tune in the pail as he sang "Boheme," or "Il Traviata." His father ran a country newspaper. As to the industrial East, he was a cagey bridge player who never let his partner out of a business deal. He is a squash player in winter and a tennis player in summer, sings baritone, a safe vocal as far as political range, and was trained as an opera singer, first in New York on a musical scholarship. There's nothing showy about him and he never makes a play to the press coop.

He appears to be, to this server, the answer to Stuart Chase's plea for a new kind of politician. In a magazine article printed about a year ago, Mr. Chase tore all political dogmas to tatters and said we would get nowhere until we began to isolate and attack the problems and settle them according to their immediate requirements, without regard to their political or philosophical context. Big town racketeering is one of those "given problems" and then some. It is interesting to note that, in his acceptance speech, Mr. Dewey renounced "political dogma."

On most of the specific political issues of the day, Mr. Dewey's opinion has not been revealed. He has been slated as "liberal" and "aggressive," but, in the days of "pecanoe and Tyler, too," the country esteemed fighting men and parents still does.

GREECE has had several attempts to get the Elgin marbles from England. They're still there. The Association of Men With Wings seems to have a prospect of reclaiming America's original Wright brothers' airplane. Orville Wright, for quite human and understandable reasons, let the plane go to England, now joins the association in effort to bring it back to this country.

When and if they succeed, it will be another feather in the flying helmet of Col. Charles Wayne Kerwood. Ever since he stopped daredevilism as one of America's most spectacular and adventurous aviators, he has been plotting to get that plane even if he has to kidnap it. That was why he formed the above association, of which he is president.

He flew and fought with French in the World war, with Greeks against the Turks in 1919, was wounded and grounded more than once, turned to barnstorming and sensational knockabout flying and became president of the International League of Aviators. He is a native of Chicago, big, bronzed, moustachioed, once a flying fighting buddy of General Frank Richards against the Riffs.

THIS department would like to come out boldly against something. An unflinching stand against red fingernails looks pretty good. Magistrate Jerome G. Brill, Brooklyn's woman magistrate, leads the way for a possible rallying of democratic powers around a woman issue. She reproves a woman defendant for being thus incarnating a worker, club woman, teacher, mother, student and lawyer. She works 18 hours a day and sleeps five. She releases subway bannisters. We need music in the subway.

Build to LAST!

THE MATERIAL THAT GOES INTO A BUILDING IS VERY ESSENTIAL TO HOW LONG IT WILL GIVE SERVICE.

We have noticed right here in KLEMME the effects of poor material Cement foundations, brick and block buildings are the most apt to deteriorate if they are not made of the right material. To insure good walls, foundations, plaster walls (known as back up blocks) one should use care in making his selections. Moisture and freezing will cause blocks and brick to go to pieces very quickly.

Brick and block with little water absorption is very essential in a building that one is putting up to last. The cost is so little more that one should not stop at the extra cost. Back up blocks on the inside of a building seemingly would not have to be vitrified, but moisture does get to these blocks as well as frost which is bad for the wall. Therefore a good vitrified backup is as necessary as a good lasting brick or block for the outside.

When building one should look for more than 20 or 30 years of service from a building before one has to reface or repair. Careful selection of material that goes into a building is very essential.

We have always advocated vitrified Brick, Block and Tile. We stock this kind of material and have our first complaint to come in from REDFIELD BRICK, BLOCK OR TILE.

At Least Five Tax Measures To Get Congressional Hearing

By Joseph W. La Bine

White House

Inconveniently close to election day have come piecemeal reports and offhand predictions concerning the U. S. fiscal situation. When President Roosevelt talks finance before congress on January 3, he may ask almost anything. But right now, as the President busies himself with budget planning, he can be guided by facts and forecasts:

Facts: Despite upswinging business, the U. S. treasury deficit for the current fiscal year jumped above one billion dollars October 20, leaping forward several million dollars a day. Gold reserves, mounting since the European scare, hit $14,008,236,361. Revised, the 1939 fiscal deficit prediction stands at $3,984,000,000, second largest in New Deal history. By next June 30, when the fiscal year ends, the U. S. public debt will hit $40,000,000,000, compared with $16,800,000,000 in June, 1931.

Forecast: Though "pump-priming" will help business, the 1940 budget will be unbalanced. Only by continued spending can the administration hold a mass vote for the 1940 election, thereby forestalling the normal swing to Republicanism. But it is far more painful to pay than merely file away the bill, and next winter's congressmen will present at least five new methods of making John Public pay:

(1) A 10 per cent "one shot" income tax levy to garner $263,000,000 needed for increased armament; (2) a processing tax to pay for the agriculture department's proposed "domestic dumping" program for crop surpluses; (3) removal of tax exemption from future issues of federal, state and local bonds, also on official salaries; (4) extension of social security to include farm laborers, domestics, bank employees, seamen, self-employed, etc.; (5) lowering of income tax exemptions under $1,000.

Coolest of all concerned with fiscal affairs has been the man in direct charge, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. Unworried by mounting gold reserves, he has chosen not to deny the hope that next year's budget may be balanced.

War

With 42,000 troops, Japan covered 100 miles in nine days, capturing Canton without dropping a single bomb. Such peaceful aggression has hitherto been unheard of in the Chinese war, giving rise to charges of a Cantonese "sellout." British, whose nearby crown colony of Hong-kong is seriously damaged by the new Japanese conquest, claim the military governor of Canton betrayed his trust for a handsome fee. Communistic Chinese choose instead to blame Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek for withdrawing Canton's crack troops into the Hankow battle sector.

But these squabbles have become secondary to China's completely despairing picture. With both Canton and Hankow in their grab bag, Japs intend to push on until all Chinese opposition crumbles. Generalissimo Chiang is ready to resign, and the brave nation's amazing defense is about to crumble under internal strife.

Virtually sneering at Great Britain's charge of a Cantonese "sellout," angry Chinese trace their fast-sinking morale directly to Great Britain's own "sellout" at Munich, when it became apparent the British lion was unwilling to help her European neighbors—much less a distant nation.

Labor

Second only to taxation in unpopularity among U. S. industrialists is the national labor relations board, which last April 9 ordered Republic Steel to reinstate 5,000 workers who struck in May, 1937. To correct possible technical errors, NLRB quickly withdrew its first order and held more hearings which critics termed "star chamber" proceedings. What NLRB gained by its second five-month hearing is a mystery, since a new order—substantially the same—was handed down recently. The result may be an important test of NLRB's power, for Republic Steel has already filed an appeal with the U. S. circuit court of appeals. What stuck in many an impartial observ-er's gullet was NLRB's denial of the Republic contention that many workers should not be reinstated because they engaged in violence. Answered NLRB: "It must be remembered that the acts of which the respondent (Republic) complains were committed by strikers in the heat and turmoil of bitter industrial strife, in which the threat of violence on the part of the respondent against the strikers was ever present and frequently carried into execution."

Domestic

The new wage-hour law affecting the lives of some 11,000,000 people engaged in interstate commerce industries, has gone into effect with much less bluster and coercion than the ill-fated NRA. Placing a floor (25 cents an hour) under wages, and a ceiling (44 a week) over hours, the act brings pay raises to 750,000 people, with shorter hours for 1,500,000 more. Responsible for the act's smooth inauguration has been Administrator Elmer F. Andrews, whose slow-moving policy has left many employers puzzled over their compliance requirements, but has nevertheless been a potent force in encouraging peace between government and business. Since NRA was outlawed because it attempted to regulate intrastate as well as interstate commerce, the administration hopes each state will formulate its own fair labor act, thereby making the national-state program complete. But wage-hour regulation is due for headaches before its numerous "bugs" are removed. At Austin, Texas, where several thousand low-salaried pecan shellers were thrown out of work, and in Puerto Rico, where 120,000 more workers were ousted, laborers wondered if low wages weren't better than none.

Politics

In an organization the size of WPA, corruption will creep in regardless of who holds the reins. Spasmodically pecking away at New Deal prestige for three years, corruption has again raised its ugly head at the crucial election time. In New Jersey, where Fascist-like Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City is the Democratic party's head man, indictments have been returned against 16 corporations and 32 persons. The charge: conspiracy to defraud WPA of $250,000 in purchase of sand and stone.

But a much more distasteful case has arisen in New Mexico, where a crusading grand jury returned indictments against 73 persons charged with making political capital of WPA. Behind this wicked picture stands Democratic Sen. Dennis Chavez, who, like every other senator, has wangled every possible cent of WPA cash for his home state. New Mexico's indictments naturally do not touch Senator Chavez, but they strike very close to home. Among inditees are his sister, his son-in-law and his cousin. The charge: use of threat and intimidation against WPA employees.

NEW MEXICO'S CHAVEZ

enforced political contribution on pain of discharge for noncompliance, enforced membership in political clubs disguised as "social" organizations and diversion of WPA funds for personal use.

● Indictment in one form or another is almost a prerequisite for nomination in Pennsylvania, where Republican Sen. James J. Davis (once indicted for running a Moose lottery) and Democratic Gov. George H. Earle (indicted for alleged graft in office) are opposing each other for the senatorial seat. Although Pennsylvania tax payers have good reason to dislike their Democratic state administration, observers are wondering whether the opulent Republican machine has very much more political prestige. Reason: The five "angels" of Pennsylvania Republicanism are Joseph N. Pew, oil millionaire; Moses I. Annenberg, Philadelphia newspaper publisher who has purchased an immense interest in the party; Ernest T. Weir of steel fame; Jay Cooke, rich Philadelphia political leader, and Joseph N. Grundy, a reactionary of amazing tenacity. Without bothering to question the motives of these men, shrewd politicians nevertheless recognize that in 1938 a quintet of millionaire sponsors is an unpopular asset for any party.

Agriculture

One feature of the 1938 farm bill calls for U. S. loans on crops affected by falling prices. When crops are sold, loans must be repaid. Due November 1 were repayments on loans covering 48,000,000 bushels of corn. But by mid-October, with corn selling on the farm from 33 to 38 cents, and at market for 44 cents, disgusted farmers saw they would be money ahead to default on loans and give Uncle Sam their corn. Thus, overnight, the U. S. government became the world's largest corn broker.

This is but one phase of a Chinese puzzle known as the American farm problem. Since 1933 it has been the personal headache of Iowa's Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, who can remember the halcyon days when all surplus wheat and cotton—the two basic crops—were bought readily by foreign nations. But foreign markets are now glutted. American farm surpluses must either be dumped abroad at any price foreign buyers are willing to pay, or be left to rot in U. S. granaries. Most people have favored the latter policy, meanwhile deploring the economic unbalance that allows many U. S. citizens to go hungry despite bountiful crops.

The easiest remedy would be to let low prices drive American farmers off the land, but this is socially inhumane, politically unsound and economically foolhardy. When the New Deal started in 1933, AAA was formulated to pay farmers for limiting their acreage. Funds came from processing taxes levied against manufacturers, but ultimately paid by consumers. When the Supreme court ruled processing taxes invalid, a "soil conservation" program was set up to pay farmers for retiring their land, ostensibly to give it a rest but actually to limit production. Thirty per cent of customs receipts were set aside to pay for it.

Last spring, with surpluses still piling up, congress passed a new farm law, too late to limit production this year, which partially accounted for its failure. Under it the government may (1) control production with consent of a majority of farmers; (2) make payments for retiring land; (3) make additional "parity" payments as a protection against less-than-production-cost prices; (4) loan money against crops. If compulsory control is enforced next year—as provided—wheat and cotton acreages must be reduced one half. Agricultural rebellion would result.

Still seeking the answer, Secretary Wallace recently tried export subsidies, which the state department's Undersecretary Francis B. Sayre condemns as "the uneconomic giving away of our substance to foreign nations." Though U. S. farmers are being subsidized the difference between export prices and the domestic market price, many observers consider it ridiculous to sell surplus foodstuffs abroad at a loss when several million Americans are going hungry. Consequently next winter's congress will be asked to adopt still another farm bill, the most far-reaching attempt yet made to kill two birds with one stone. The birds: farm problem and poor relief. The Wallace plan: surplus farm products would be distributed to U. S. low-income groups instead of being dumped abroad.

Though the federal surplus commodities corporation already distributes potatoes, prunes, milk and other minor products not affected by AAA, the new plan would include beef, pork, wheat, corn and cotton. Broadly, it would follow New York city's method of selling milk to relief families for eight cents a quart, the city paying the difference. If expanded to a national proposition, the U. S. would pay retailers the difference between standard price and cost price.

To pay for it, Secretary Wallace asks restoration of processing taxes, which theoretically fall on manufacturers but ultimately strike the consumer. Opponents argue that retail prices would rise, that consumption would drop and substitutes would be encouraged, thereby hurting the farmer. But since the government hopes to stabilize farm prices, its counter-argument is that producers would have steady income and increased purchasing power, thereby boosting U. S. prosperity. These are the arguments next winter's congress will hear.

IN HOLLYWOOD there is a man named Jack Schulze who is one of the wizards of modern times, and it's dollars to doughnuts that you haven't the faintest notion who Jack Schulze is. He's art director for Edward Small Productions, which United Artists releases and here is a brief account of his latest exploit.

Small, producer of "The Duke of West Point," assigned him to a simple little task—just to transport the United States Military academy from West Point to Hollywood. And Schulze did it. That is, he built in Hollywood so perfect a replica of the academy that the West Point graduates who have come in hordes to visit the set felt that they were right back in college.

Perhaps you'll be interested in knowing how it was done. A camera crew was sent to West Point to make films of practically every inch of the academy. That ran into almost 50,000 feet of film, which showed the buildings, the grounds, and was a record of the sort of life that is led there. That's a lot of film, when you consider that the average feature picture, that runs for about an hour and a quarter, is 9,000 feet.

Each morning, before shooting a particular scene, Director Alfred E. Greene goes to his projection room and looks over pictures made under similar circumstances at West Point—pictures showing a day in the life of a cadet. Then he goes to the same spot on the set—there it is, waiting for him, whether it be in the mess hall or on Flirtation walk.

West Point's Michie stadium had to be reproduced for the picture's football game; Art Director Schulze and a crew of workmen did this in the interior of Pasadena's famous Rose Bowl. There's an ice hockey game too—and that set was built in the Polar palace, where Hollywood's stars go skating in their spare time.

Army experts approved the story of the picture. Its author, George Bruce, spent many weeks at West Point as the commandant's guest, and made volumes of notes for his story.

Gary Cooper, star of "The Cowboy and the Lady," likes to putter. So, not long ago, he settled down with his car—one of those rakish foreign models, eight years old—to do a bit of tinkering. He was getting only 5½ miles to the gallon of gas; something had to be done about it.

He did it. He gets four miles to the gallon now!

Gary Cooper

Twelve years ago Hal Roach threw Wheeling, W. Va., into a dither, when he arrived there looking for a double for Baby Peggy. He finally chose Mrs. Wyn's little girl, Nan.

Nan is now one of CBS's prize singers. She opened at a New York night club. She received a carload of floral tributes—among them a huge bouquet with which was enclosed an old photograph of her made up as Baby Peggy.

Bob Burns, substituting for Bing Crosby as master of ceremonies on their radio program during the summer, did so well—with a lot of help from a lot of other swell people—that the program stayed in third place in the popularity ratings.

Now that Bing has returned he's giving more attention to his farm. He has six acres in the San Fernando valley, and it's a real farm. Instead of a swimming pool (fancy a movie star without one!) he's building an extra-special barn. He's going in for the best farm equipment that money can buy, and he's going to market potatoes.

Those popularity polls are interesting. Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy hold their program in first place among the hour-long broadcasts; "The Radio Theater," Monday nights from Hollywood, is second. The Vallee Varieties is fourth of the big shows, Major Bowes' amateurs are fifth.

Malibu used to be the place where a motion picture star simply had to have a beach house. Then the directors discovered it, and the stars sold out and went elsewhere. Along came the writers, and the directors sold. Now the writers are moving—and Malibu is perfectly lovely and quiet.

ODDS AND ENDS—Don Wilson is a busy man these days; he's on two transcontinental programs and is making travelogues at Universal. . . . Benny Goodman's to make his classical debut in January at Carnegie Hall in New York, where he gave his sensational swing concert last winter. . . . Alan Moubray ("There Goes My Heart") announced that he wanted to be adopted by America, so that he could have a native town of his own; eight cities promptly took him up on it. . . . Anne Shirley and her husband, John Payne (who is one of the Paynes of Virginia and likes to have people remember it), are off to Roanoke on a deferred honeymoon. © Western Newspaper Union.

Follow These Exercises to Keep Figure

By PATRICIA LINDSAY
© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

WHY is it necessary for the modern woman to use an artificial method to strengthen her muscles and to promote good health? It is because our manner of living offers almost no opportunity to use the larger, important muscles of the body—the abdominal, back and thigh muscles.

We live inactive lives. We travel by motor or train more than we walk. We do our housework with electrical aids or have servants do it for us. Most office jobs demand eight hours of sitting and frequently in poor posture. Selling work in stores requires the over-use of the legs and feet. Sewing, writing, bridge and many other so-called activities are actually inactivities!

Games No Substitute. You probably think that recreational sports such as tennis, bowling, badminton, golf and riding are sufficient exercise. But they are not. They stimulate the body through increased circulation and allow the skin pores to secrete waste but they do not build the body symmetrically because they are "one-sided." Seldom is a woman adept in using both her right hand and her left hand in sports.

Walking can be an excellent activity if it is done on soil which allows a spring to the step and if the body is carried with good posture at a steady pace and if you wear loose clothing and correct walking shoes.

Swimming is the exception in recreational sports. It exercises all the muscles of the body providing no one stroke is overpracticed, and it develops the body symmetrically and beautifully.

These Exercises Will Help

So, you see, unless you can swim daily it becomes quite necessary for you to resort to corrective exercises if you desire good health and a supple body. Exercises that will offset the ravages of our sedentary, inactive living. Here are two for firming the vital abdominal muscles, or in other words, for flattening your tummy! Why not begin scientifically to develop a pleasing figure?

(Exercise 1)

For Stout Woman

Lie flat on your back, arms at sides—parallel with body. Bend knees back to abdomen. Then pull knees with clasped hands back to chest, gradually raising the hips from floor three to four inches. Lower hips—keeping knees bent. Repeat four times and relax. Repeat not more than 12 times each day.

(Exercise 2)

For Thin Woman with Protruding Abdomen

Sit on floor with legs wide apart and knees slightly relaxed. Place hands palm downward just behind hips for support. Now push your abdomen out, to right, back, to left—making a complete circle such as you would in a Hula-Hula dance! As you circle consciously tighten the muscles. Circle five times without stopping. Relax. Circle five times in opposite direction. Circle twenty times in all.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

If you are the nervous, high-strung type of individual, why not learn to relax your way to poise. Take things easy. Rest. Exercise to relax only Stop worrying.

It is never the thoroughly relaxed person who suffers from insomnia. Lack of sleep is usually a symptom of a harried mind or a nervous disorder. Much can be done to overcome insomnia.

Regular sleeping hours are quite necessary. Make it a habit to retire the same hour and to arise the same hour until you are relaxed.

Do not overeat or eat too fast. Both are likely to give you restless nights. You can skip a meal a day if you wish. Or substitute for two meals each day a glass of milk every four hours and glasses of fruit juices in between.

Do not resort to nerve sedatives unless your physician advises them.

Charming, Practical All-Day Dress

THESE two designs are so good looking and slim-lined that you'll enjoy wearing them shopping and runabout as well at home. Make in percale and calico, and in challis, jersey or crepe. Both are easy to make as bold dressing. Each pattern includes a detailed sew chart.

Buttoned Down the Front. This softened version of the classic shirtwaist has fullness over the bust and a slight blouse at the waistline, which makes easy to wear as well as to work in. The skirt has a nice flare to it. Shrugged shoulder sleeves and white cuffs and collar add to the crisp, smart look, and make more becoming. You'll find the capacious patch pockets handy!

For Large Figures. Here's one of the most becoming and comfortable work dresses you ever had on, if you're in the 36 to 52 size range. Every detail is designed to give you freedom of movement, and to make you look thin. The armholes are ample. The darted waistline looks slim without being tight, and it blouses just a bit for greater ease. The scalloped front, braid-trimmed edges and white collar (with long lines, becoming to full faces) trim it up just enough.

The Patterns. 1618 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. With long sleeves, size 16 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, ¾ yard for contrasting collar and cuffs. 2 yards of braid. With short sleeves 4½ yards.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

How the United States Has Kept the Peace for 20 Years

An Article for Armistice Day
By NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

WHEN the last gun sounded on the morning of Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, the civilized world drew a long breath, satisfied that "the war to end wars" had come to its close and that war was ended for all time. Thoughtful men realized, however, that the idea of using war to settle disputes between nations was buried deep in the consciousness of men, and that it was doubtful if the lessons of the World War would be sufficiently clear to turn the thoughts of men to a newer and more intelligent course of action.

What were the lessons of the World War? First—that 10,000,000 lives were sacrificed in the war that was fought to end all wars.

Second—the loss in money was equally staggering. In 1920, the Carnegie Endowment published Ernest L. Bogart's book "The Direct and Indirect Cost of the Great War." He stated that the direct money cost was $186,233,637,097, and the indirect cost $151,812,352,560, a total of $338,045,989,657. These figures do not include the cost of human lives and vitality.

Third—that wars engender gigantic economic problems which affect the conquerors as adversely as the vanquished.

The history of the past 20 years of attempts to keep the peace among the nations of the world is tions are brushed aside with a light heart and a contemptuous gesture. Respect for law and observance of the pledged word have sunk to an inconceivably low level. The outworn slogans of the glorification of war are again resounding in many portions of the globe. Armed force, naked and unashamed, is again being used as an instrument of policy and a means of attaining national ends through aggression and aggrandizement. It is being employed with brutality and savagery that outrages and shocks every humane instinct.

"There is desperate need in our country, and in every country, of a strong and united public opinion in support of such a renewal and demonstration of faith in the possibility of a world order based on law and international co-operative effort."

Thus spoke the statesman looking facts in the face, turning his back upon empty and meaningless formulas and facing the future with insight and with courage. But there is no time to be lost. The familiar public policy of "Wait and See" will not do. The time has come for quick, courageous and constructive leadership, and it is possible now for the American people, in the spirit of that declaration, to offer it, both to their own advantage and for the rebuilding of the broken foundations of world prosperity and world peace.

Isolation Not an American Policy.

The superstition that our traditional policy is one of isolation is contradicted by every fact in American history from the time of Benjamin Franklin to the present day. We have not only never been isolated but we have sought every opportunity to explain our life, our institutions, our ideals to peoples in other parts of the world, and particularly to the peoples of France and of Great Britain. What was Benjamin Franklin doing while spending 22 years of his life in Paris and in London? What was Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, doing when sitting in the gallery of Versailles yonder and listening to the debate on the Declaration of the Rights of Man? What was John Adams doing, living in London and explaining the new Federal Constitution to the British people? What was being done by our great constructive secretaries of state from that time almost to this—John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, William H. Seward, Hamilton Fish, Elihu Root, every one of them a powerful force in the affairs of the whole world, every one of them offering helpful co-operation, constructive criticism and guidance on behalf of the American people?

If by a policy of isolation is meant that our people intend at every possible cost to refrain from war, well and good; but that is not isolation: it is something quite different. We are now dealing with the real underlying forces, forces of thought, forces of opinion—the forces which move men in their social, economic and political life.

It is habitual with certain of our public men who hail isolation as a policy to quote a sentence from President Washington's farewell address and another sentence from Thomas Jefferson's first inaugural. Indeed, what they usually do is to quote the sentence from Jefferson's first inaugural and ascribe it to Washington's farewell address. Both men were effective exponents of the policy of international collaboration and co-operation, and what those two sentences meant was a warning not to become involved in the Napoleonic wars, which some years later we managed to do in the form of the War of 1812. We do not realize how powerful has been the movement among our people not only to co-operate in maintaining prosperity and peace, but in offering leadership and guidance and counsel to that end.

Run your eye back over the history of the last 40 years.

The Czar's Appeal.

It is a little more than 40 years since there was issued in the name of the Czar of All the Russias the most extraordinary appeal to other governments that peal to other governments that peal to the world has ever heard. It is the world's highest, inviolable document entitled to a classic document to come into being and counsel together as to forth and counsel together as to ways and means of collaborating to preserve the peace of the world. The result was the First Hague conference of 1899. President McKinley rejoiced at the possibility of accepting this invitation and sent to that conference a delegation of outstanding Americans, at whose head was Andrew D. White, statesman and educator. It was the American delegation which saved that conference from hopeless failure, because, when the governments could not agree upon some of the largest phases of the questions submitted to them, it was the American delegation which pro-

Few men are better equipped to write of world affairs than Nicholas Murray Butler, the president of Columbia university, who is also the president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Dr. Butler has been awarded the Nobel Peace prize, has been given degrees by universities the world over. He has had an inside view of all of the steps in foreign affairs taken by the United States and other nations since the Armistice of November 11, 1918. His library at 60 Morningside Drive, New York, contains a valuable collection of books by the leading statesmen of all nations, many of whom are his personal friends. The adviser of Presidents and Prime Ministers, Dr. Butler is as optimistic today as when he counseled with Andrew Carnegie on the problems of educating public opinion for world peace more than a quarter of a century ago.

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

posed that they should agree upon bringing into existence a Permanent Court of Arbitration. That was done. The court was set up and in a year or two it began to function. Next came the invitation of 1908.

There is hardly an American who knows how far our public opinion went at that fortunate time, almost exactly 30 years ago. It was on June 4, 1910, that this joint resolution was on the calendar of the house of representatives at Washington.

A Real Program for Peace.

The resolution was to authorize the appointment of a commission in relation to universal peace:

"Resolved—that a commission of five members be appointed by the President of the United States to consider the expedience of utilizing existing international agencies for the purpose of limiting the armaments of the nations of the world by international agreement, and of constituting the combined navies of the world an international force for the preservation of universal peace, and to consider and report upon any other means to diminish the expenditures of government for military purposes and to lessen the probabilities of war."

What happened to that remarkable resolution? It passed the house of representatives by unanimous consent. It went to the senate on June 20, and four days following, it passed the senate also by unanimous consent, and was signed by the President of the United States. So the government of the United States was then proposing to lead the way to the establishment of an international police force for the protection of international law and international morality. Was that isolation?

It is vitally important, not only for America but for the whole civilized world to realize what our people and our government were unanimously prepared to do then, and to bring them back to be prepared to do it now.

Strides Toward Peace.

Great progress was made, although by different methods and in various directions, between 1919 and 1929. Steps were taken now here, now there, to improve international relations and international conditions. I shall always believe the untimely death, first of Dr. Stresemann and, then of M. Briand to be largely responsible for checking the constructive movement which was then going forward. Immediately thereafter came the world economic and monetary crisis in which we still live and which holds every nation in its grasp. It is a complete illusion to think that there is a French crisis and a German crisis and an English crisis and an Argentine crisis. There is a world crisis, which expresses itself under different conditions and limitations in each country, but at bottom the causes and their effects are absolutely one and the same.

Understanding those facts and looking them in the face, why have we not been able to make progress in solving these questions? Why is it that the world is going on using up the savings of a thousand years and borrowing as against the possible savings of generations to come? Why is it that we have been unable thus far in any considerable degree to co-operate to check the growth of these destructive forces, economic and social, every one of which makes for the undermining of prosperity and for temptation to destroy peace? Why is it?

There met in London, at Chatham house, in March, 1935, 61 of the leading personalities of the world, statesmen, economists, bankers, industrialists, diplomats, coming from a dozen countries. They spent days in intimate consultation as to how to answer the question which I am now asking. To the great surprise of themselves as well as of everyone else, those 61 men, with different backgrounds and different points of view, agreed unanimously upon a program of economic and monetary reform. That program, simple and easily understood, has been enthusiastically accepted by the International Chamber of Commerce and by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and those two bodies are now working day and night in their quiet way to press it upon the attention of the public and of the governments in order to stop the policy of "Wait and See" and to get something done. Any observer of human nature and of government must know that the longer we "Wait and See," the more ammunition we present to dictatorship in whatever form it may show itself.

An Age-Old Problem.

We permit these forces to repeat themselves generation after generation, century after century. We look at them as if they were utterly new, as if the world had never heard of them before; and yet in one way or another, from the time of ancient Egypt, man has had to deal with this problem in some one of its forms.

We are face to face with that and it can only be solved in one or two ways. If I may contradict myself, the first way will not solve it. It may be solved by force, which means a temporary solution only, or it may be solved by reason. The minorities problem is not new. Fortunately, France has been very little troubled with it. But look at Great Britain: Angles, Saxons, Danes, Normans, Scots, Celts. War after war for 500 years and then finally they found a solution. They can all live in peace and quiet and order together.

We in America have had a very grave minorities problem with our colored people. It led to a vast civil war which almost disrupted the nation, and it took 70 years before it came to a climax. So, when you see these minorities problems elsewhere, in Asia, in Africa, in Eastern Europe, do not forget that we have had no end of experience with that problem and that there are only the two ways of dealing with it: by force, which does not settle it, and by reason, which will settle it. Time, good order, kindly feeling, high-mindedness, moral standards and faith in human nature are necessary.

As one goes about the world today, he must be impressed with the discouragement which is felt everywhere. That is not the way to solve anything. Pessimism is the last resource of the coward. Optimism, faith in mankind, belief in ideas, courage and willingness to call upon your fellow-men to come up out of their little narrow personal environments and to show themselves citizens of their nations and of the world, to constitute a constructive force that, instead of making the Twentieth century of ours the end of an era, will show that we have been able to make it the beginning of a new order—a peaceful and a prosperous world.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—A few years ago, this writer had the job of getting up an amateur entertainment. Robert Sherwood was just an added starter, but he ran away with the show. He is six feet, six inches tall, of lath-like dimensions and has a trick of undulating both his chest and his Adam's apple at the same time, when he sings. To hear him sing, "When the Rob-Rob-Robin Comes Bob - Bob - Bobbin'," undulating through a full octave, and flapping his long arms, is rare entertainment. He could have filled the theaters that way if he hadn't become a playwright.

With all his gift for foolery, his is the "weilschmerz" of a shy, sensitive, thoughtful man, and his are the peculiarly civilized qualities which enabled him to portray "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" with insight and fidelity which have brought the heartiest critical salvo of years and many cries of "the great American drama at last." Some of the reviewers see here a thrilling "play within a play" in the skilled and timely dramatization of Lincoln's timeless utterance at just this moment of national wavering and soul-searching. Mr. Sherwood may be a man of destiny.

He would dismiss all that with a slight thoracic undulation and perhaps a modest quip. He is the least pontifical of men, as he proved when he was a drum-major in the war. Unable to make the grade in our army, he joined the Canadian Black Watch. They put him in kilts, gave him a shako and a huge baton and enjoyed him tremendously as he quickly mastered the necessary twirling and stick-tossing stunts. But they also used him in plenty of fighting, in several hot engagements. The trouble was that the trenches were only six feet deep and he was a constant lure to enemy sharpshooters. He was gassed and sent to the hospital for a long stretch—about two feet beyond the end of the cot. He read a great deal, and decided to be an author.

Demobilized, he connected with Vanity Fair as dramatic critic, did a two weeks' turn as a reporter in Boston, joined the staff of Life and later became its editor. He was born in New Rochelle, in 1896, and left Harvard to get into the war.

This is his eleventh play, not counting "Tom Ruggles' Surprise," which he wrote at the age of eight. His fame as a playwright began with "The Road to Rome," which he wrote in 1927, "just to lift a couple of mortgages," as he put it. In 1922, he married Miss Mary Brandon, the actress. He has an apartment in Sutton place, New York, and a modest estate in Surrey, England, where he has been helping Alexander Korda produce films.

MANAGER EDWARD JOHN-SON'S musical autarchy at the Metropolitan comes along slowly, and we aren't yet quite musically self-sustaining.

Met Takes a Singer From Potato Patch

For the opening of its new season, the Met announced 14 new singers. There is one American contralto, 11 Germans, Austrians, Italians and Swedes and two new American male singers, John Carter and Leonard Warren.

Over in our Rockland county, N. Y., we have been quite excited over a "popular local farmer," as one of the parochial sheets had it, making the grade at the Metropolitan. He is the 26-year-old Mr. Carter, who has been growing beans and potatoes, singing at his work, near New City. Mr. Carter, born in New York city, studied engineering at New York university. The depression turned him to vaudeville and later to his joint cultivation of voice and garden truck. He and Mr. Warren were winners in the Metropolitan's audition of last March.

Mr. Warren, also 26, was born in the Bronx, son of a Russian-born fur dealer. He felt constraint in turning his big voice loose in town, but let it run in the big north woods, with his father on fur-buying trips. That was how he first knew he had a voice. He studied at Columbia university and night school.

How the Expert Shoots

The best and most effective shooting form requires little movement of the hands and arms, once the gun has been put on the shoulder and the comb is against the cheek. From that point on, the direction of the muzzle is changed by moving the entire upper part of the shooter's body, the gun remaining in the same relative position with respect to the cheek and shoulder.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Try Vinegar.—Wipe the pantry, shelves with a cloth dipped in vinegar. It gives a fresh and pleasant atmosphere to the larder and repels flies.

Cleaning Oven Dishes.—Marks on fireproof oven dishes can be removed by rubbing with common salt while the dish is still hot.

Care of Gas Stove.—To prevent a gas stove from rusting rub the entire inside with a flannel cloth which has been saturated with sweet oil.

Keeping Mustard Moist.—Dry mustard mixed with milk instead of water will not dry out but will keep moist until it has all been used.

This is the time of year when town and rural folk are getting ready for Winter. Your car is as important then as now. Give it a thought. Be forehanded. Stop at your favorite dealer and let him drain the Summer-worn oil and put in Acid-Free Quaker State Winter Oil. You'll be thankful the first cold morning.—Adv.

Taking Pains

When we are young we should take pains to be agreeable; when we are old we must take pains not to be disagreeable

Wait, Mother—Ask Your Doctor First

Never give your children unknown "Bargain" remedies to take unless you ask your doctor.

A mother may save a few pennies giving her children unknown preparations. But a child's life is precious beyond pennies. So—ask your doctor before you give any remedy you don't know all about.

And when giving the common children's remedy, milk of magnesia, always ask for "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Because for three generations Phillips' has been favored by many physicians as a standard, reliable and proved preparation—marvelously gentle for youngsters.

Many children like Phillips' in the newer form—tiny peppermint-flavored tablets that chew like candy. Each tablet contains the equivalent of one teaspoonful of the liquid Phillips' 25¢ for a big box.

A bottle of Phillips' liquid Milk of Magnesia costs but 25¢. So—anyone can afford the genuine. Careful mothers ask for it by its full name "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

GOTTLIEB GOBELI

Obituary

Gottlieb Gobeli was born March 18, 1866 in Weinenbach, Canton Bern, Switzerland, and passed away at his home in Klemme, Iowa, October 31, 1938 having reached the age of 72 years, 7 months and 13 days.

At the age of 18 years Mr. Gobeli came to America. He was united in marriage with Amelia Paul on Dec. 30, 1892, which union was blessed with 6 children. Their married life was spent in and near Meservey, Iowa, until twelve years ago when they moved to Klemme, where they have made their home since.

Mr. Gobeli had been in failing health for the past two years. For a few weeks he was bed fast and suffered much. During his illness he found great pleasure in singing, not only for himself but to the benefit of others.

For many years he was a member of the Evangelical Church at Meservey. A few years ago he united with the Methodist Church at Klemme. He was prepared to go home and meet his God. He was a kind and loving husband and father.

The end came Monday evening, October 31, when he was released from his suffering and went to his reward. Those who mourn his passing are his wife and five children. They are: Robert, Mrs. Carl Hopkey, Forrest, Lester and Albert. Frank, the youngest son, preceded him in death 13 years ago. One brother, Robert of Lidderdale, Iowa; 13 grand children and many relatives and a host of friends.

High School News

The business training class finished up the work on filing last Thursday. One day last week, Miss Brakel asked the question, "Which is more important, the filing or the finding of information?" The class was about evenly divided on its answers, and there were a few arguments. Then, Miss Brakel said we would have a debate on the question. Three speakers were appointed for each group. Bruce Arnold, Billy Zabulka and Lorraine Buntentbach were on the side of the importance of filing and Lucille Hartbeck, Melvin Coobs and Homer Bickenderfer were on the side of finding. The question was finally settled, almost equally divided the points between the two sides.

Hanging Shelves You Can Make of Spools

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
A letter received from a reader

if you have any ideas for fixing up spools? I have in mind the spool book shelves and corner spool shelves.

We seemed to remember wire and the result has been

Call of the Winter Mode For Versatile Fur Styling

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

BEING the beauty, the elegance, the artistry, the charm and versatility of this season's fashions it would seem as if each and every designer is possessed with the idea that nothing short of a masterpiece must be turned out in order to meet the demands of a fastidious public. It is a fact we are growing more exacting each year in regard to the furs we wear. We have come to expect of fur that it be styled with the versatility of supple fabric, that every phase of fashion from hats to shoes and even dresses (very smart ones are being turned out all of thin supple fur) be expressed in terms of fur. The encouraging thing about it is that the new fashions in fur not only come up to expectations but they go far beyond.

This season it is not only that there are coats and jackets and various apparel wrought in fur but special emphasis is being placed on "little furs" as they are often called. By which we mean the most charming little odd neckpieces and hats with bags to match and as for hats, to be properly stylewise you really must carry a muff from now until spring.

The new fur showings give the impression that furriers find it no trick at all to manipulate furs with as much sang-froid as if it were the most tractable and supple material. Note to the left in the picture an ultra smart suit tailored in black galyack. The pelts have been rendered as pliable as cloth and are here expertly worked in achieving this new box-jacket style with its graceful trim-fitting slenderness. The high hat is of black suede and galyack.

Fits Like Glove

This charming satin evening gown has a modish zinnia-rust color. The puffed sleeves and the flaring hemline are important style features. To say this exquisite gown, which made its debut at a fashion show held in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, "fits like a glove" is no idle boast for it does. The reason for its ideal fit is that it is tailored to the form look is that it is fashioned across the bust and at the back of matalax satin quite in the manner of the amazing lace-trimmed bathing suits that are such general favorites last

The double-breasted reefer new "longer" jacket centered in the group is in rich Persian lamb. This is an ultra chic style with the "new" look that makes it convincingly of 1938 vintage. The hat worn with it is also of Persian. It has an insert of bright grosgrain and little red leather motifs held with silver embroidery.

The smartest fashion going is the fur-jacket costume. There are such legions of fur jackets this season and they embrace every silhouette from bolero to the widely exploited "longer" jacket and the furs employed in making them run such a gamut of luxury and novelty, that the best one can hope to do is to touch a few highspots in describing them.

A new fur to some of us, guanaco by name, is receiving a lot of attention this season from the spectator sports angle. This tawny fur is attractively streaked with white. It is a natural guanaco that is so smartly used in the youthful sports jacket pictured in the foreground. The Breton worn with it is of multi-colored hand-woven wool shaped into a rounded brim.

As to hats of fur if you keep pace with fashion a fur headpiece to complement your fur coat or your fur neckpiece or the fur trim on your dress becomes a necessary luxury. © Western Newspaper Union.

Ostrich Restored To Ancient Glory

Comes again the ostrich upon the fashion scene, as naturally it must, since the current season is one of greater pomp and splendor. It is true Edwardian elegance that the new ostrich trims now bring into the fall and winter millinery picture. The tiny hats with the sweep of a single ostrich plume from back to front are amusingly quaint and wonderfully flattering. Have the fun of trying one on, you'll probably decide to buy it at first glance in the mirror.

Those cunning little tips of yore! See them this season clustered, prince of Wales fashion, atop tiny velvet evening caps or surmounting upswept curls that give the correct evening coiffure.

There is promise too, that intriguing ostrich neckwear and ostrich-trimmed evening wraps will frequent the winter fashion scene.

Fall Styles Call For New Corsetry

In the new silhouettes the trend is toward an uplift bustline, that gives more of a corseted figure. Since the call is for a slenderized waistline that extends into a sleek and slim body line up to the bust it is very necessary to look into this matter of the new corsetry that designers offer in order to conform to demands of a "different" figure from that heretofore advocated in fashion's realm.

New Season Laces Most Attractive

Among the lovely new laces brought out this season comes a most attractive sequin-embroidered type. Floral motifs patterned throughout are wide-spaced, giving a very new look. Each flower is worked in part with glittering sequins, color-matched to the lace. A quins, color-matched to the lace, dance frock in burgundy red lace worked in sequins in same color is something to covet.

THE SACREDNESS OF HUMAN LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20 13, Matthew 5 21-26 38-42.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt not kill—Exodus 20 13 Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer—1 John 3 15

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education, used by permission

The sanctity of human life finds its foundation in the fact that God created man in His own likeness and image. Because that is true no man has any right to take the life of another for any cause except at the direct command of God. Only by the orderly process of law for the protection of society and in accordance with the Word of God may there be any such action by man toward man. Both of these truths are declared in Scripture in God's covenant with Noah (Gen 9 5, 6), which was made possibly a thousand years before the Ten Commandments were given to Moses.

Life is held rather cheaply in our day. Nations count their boys and girls as only so much "war material." Life is destroyed on the highway, in the shop, or in the home. Let us declare again the solemn command of God, "Thou shalt not kill."

I. The Prohibition of Murder (Exod. 20 13)

The word "kill" in this commandment is one which means a violent and unauthorized taking of life, and is therefore more properly translated "murder." Not all killing is murder. A man may kill another entirely accidentally, or he may be the duly constituted legal officer carrying out the law of the land in taking the life of one who has forfeited his right to live because he has slain another. There is also the right of self-defense, be it individual or collective. But these are the only exceptions; let us not attempt to justify any other.

Murder is too prevalent in our land. In 1936 there were 13,242 outright killings—a murder every 40 minutes. The head of the United States secret service estimates that there are 200,000 persons at large in our land who "have murder in their hearts and who will take human life before they die." Also in 1936 there were 37,800 deaths in automobile accidents. Some of these were by unavoidable accidents, but many were really murder because the one responsible drove with defective brakes, dangerous tires, or while he was intoxicated. Add to these the deaths in industry caused by failure to provide proper safeguards or healthy working conditions, and by the exploitation of child labor, and we say again, that we should cry aloud, "Thou shalt do no murder."

II. The Cause of Murder (Matt. 5:21, 22)

The Sermon on the Mount, from which the rest of our lesson is taken, while it "describes the character of the citizens of the earthly kingdom which the Messiah came to set up" and "assumes a class of people already saved, regenerated, and in fellowship with their King" (James M. Gray), does provide fundamental principles for the guidance of the Christian.

In this matter of murder, Jesus cuts right through the outward aspects of the matter and points out that an angry hatred in the heart is the root of all murder. If we hate, we have murder in our hearts. Circumstances may hinder its fulfillment, but the danger is always there until we remove the cause. Just being angry—calling our brother "Raca" (the modern equivalent of which is "nobody there"), and calling him "thou fool," which classifies him as "morally worthless"—these are the three dreadful downward steps to murder. And they begin in anger. May God help those of us who have strong feelings that we may not yield them to the devil in such anger against our brother!

III. The Prevention of Murder (Matt 5:23-26, 38-42)

Prevention with God means more than putting up a barrier to keep us from killing. He deals with the heart, and thus puts the whole life right. It is not even a question of right. It is not even a question of how we may feel against our brother. If he has aught against us we are to do all we can to win him. He may be unreasonable, grasping and unfair. However, the spirit that will win him is not that of retaliation or sullen submission to the inevitable, but rather a free and willing going even beyond what is required.

The full interpretation of this passage is not possible in our limited space. It is clear from other scriptures that it does not mean that wicked and unscrupulous men are to be permitted to defraud, and destroy God's people. At the same time, we must not explain away the heart of our Lord's interpretation. Let us seek His grace that we may, like Him, silence by our loving deeds and words even the bitter gainsayers of the gospel.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Food Value and Versatility of Gelatin; Outlines Its Many Uses in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

WHEN we try to appraise the nutritional values of any one food in comparison with others, as a rule we have a difficult task. Most foodstuffs are composed of so many different substances that what is lacking in one will be supplied by another, and making comparisons may therefore be misleading as well as futile. But there is one food which is outstanding, not only because it is far less complex than most others, but because it is no exaggeration to say that without it, some of us might not be alive, and those of us who are alive would obtain far less enjoyment from our daily existence.

That food is gelatin!

What Is Gelatin?

Gelatin is a protein food which has no equal as a carrier, binder and "extender" of a wide variety of other nutritive materials. Chemically, it is classified as a colloid, which means that in solution, it can be removed from its solvent by filtration. It is because of this that it is so useful in producing smooth, delicious ice creams and other dainties, free from ice crystals.

Gelatin is an almost pure protein—a kind of protein known as an albuminoid. It is not a complete protein, because it is deficient in three of the amino acids that are necessary both to support growth and repair body tissues. In this it differs from meat, cheese, fish, eggs and milk, which are known as complete proteins.

It cannot be used as the sole source of protein in the diet, because those three missing amino acids are necessary for the formation of new body tissue. But it is especially rich in lysine, one of the protein building stones that is particularly important in the diet of children. Experiments indicate that no other amino acid can take the place of lysine and that it must be furnished by the food if adequate nutrition is to be maintained.

That coupled with the fact that it is non-irritating and easily digestible accounts for the large part it plays in the diet of infants and young children.

How It Is Made

Contrary to old wives' tales, gelatin is not made from hoofs and horns. In fact, there is no gelatin in hoofs or horns. It is extracted from connective tissue in the skins and from the bones of food animals.

Every homemaker who has made soup by simmering a knuckle bone for hours, and has found the soup "jellied" after standing overnight in the refrigerator, has prepared gelatin on a small scale. The same principles are followed by the gelatin manufacturer, only he operates in a much larger food kitchen, and each step of the preparation is scientifically controlled so as to insure a uniform finished product.

Gelatin is sold in two forms—the unflavored, granulated product which requires the addition of flavoring, and when used for dessert purposes, sweetening; and the gelatin dessert powders which contain added sugar, color, flavor and fruit acid. So popular are these convenient gelatin desserts, that about 10,000,000 pounds of gelatin are used annually for this purpose.

From Infancy to Old Age

Nutritionists recognize gelatin as a food possessing many unique advantages in the daily diet, and it is prescribed by physicians for a variety of special diets. New-born babies, for example, are sometimes given a gelatin-sugar-salt solution which provides readily available protein to raise the protein level of the blood. When an infant cannot readily digest milk, owing to the formation of hard curds, the doctor may recommend the addition of 1 per cent of gelatin dissolved in the milk. This usually causes it to be assimilated easily and satisfactorily.

When it comes time to change a baby's food from liquids to solids, gelatin also proves useful, for its soft, semi-solid texture makes an excellent transitional food.

With toddlers and school children, gelatin—the carrier and "extender"—provides a splendid method for offering foods that are disliked. Vegetables that draw forth protests when presented in the usual fashion are eaten with relish when molded into a sparkling lime- or lemon-flavored salad. The coarse texture of certain raw vegetables, such as carrots and cabbage, or the tart flavor of some fruits, may likewise be modified by serving them in a gelatin base.

And it doesn't require statistics from nursery schools to tell mothers how readily children eat gelatin desserts when they are brilliant with color and flavored with

Building, Maintaining Healthy Teeth

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

It is an alarming fact that almost every adult in this great land of ours is affected by some form of oral disease, and that more than 90 per cent of our school children have decayed teeth. A prominent medical authority made the statement that if dental decay became rare, instead of almost universal, more than half of all sickness would be eliminated.

Remarkable and widely heralded advances have been made in our knowledge of how to control and prevent many dangerous and debilitating diseases. A decayed tooth is a poison factory, distributing its noxious product to every part of the body. In the body, that poison attacks and centers in the weakest spot. It may lead to neuritis, rheumatic ailments, dyspepsia, or duodenal ulcers. It may even be a contributing cause of heart disease.

Only a small percentage of our population is yet aware of the far-reaching effects of teeth upon health. There is a close relationship between healthy teeth and healthy bodies, and between decayed teeth and sickly bodies.

By learning something of the importance of caring properly for the teeth, some men and women of middle age look and feel younger than their parents did at the same age.

I have endeavored in many of the WHAT TO EAT AND WHY articles, which have appeared in this newspaper over my signature, to point out the close relationship between diet and dental disease; between frequent and thorough brushing of the teeth with an efficient dentifrice so as to remove all food particles, and strong, beautiful teeth.

I have received many letters from readers of these articles, showing that homemakers are eager for sound, authoritative advice, on the proper care of the teeth. To help these and other readers to know how to properly care for their teeth, I have prepared a booklet on BUILDING AND MAINTAINING HEALTHY TEETH which I am offering FREE, because I feel so strongly that this information should be in every home, knowing as I do, that the salvation of the human race may lie in saving their teeth. Address, C. Houston Goudiss, 210 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

orange, raspberry, cherry, strawberry or other well liked flavors. Every mother knows this from her own experience—and I rather suspect that many mothers describe these attractive molded desserts as the prize to be won in return for cleaning the plate of the main course!

In the Reducing Diet

Both men and women who are counting their calories, in an effort to avoid overweight, or to reduce, can profit by taking gelatin salads and desserts, which satisfy hunger without providing unwanted fuel value.

In cases of digestive disturbance, gelatin is frequently recommended because of its bland taste, and because it leaves no residue in the lower intestinal tract.

This same splendid food is also advised by doctors when a high protein diet is desired to speed growth, or during convalescence from an illness. Gelatin may be added to broths, milk, fruit and vegetables, and these, in turn, may be incorporated in solidified gelatin.

Indeed, this many-sided foodstuff has come to play such a wide and varied role in nutrition, not only by itself but by enhancing the value of other foods, that it must be numbered among the products that help to increase national health and vigor.

Mr. Hanson, last Friday, had used the rifle hunting and when he came back to his house, leaned the gun against the porch. The rifle fell down and discharged the bullet into his wrist, going clear through and striking against a steel case in his breast pocket in which he carried his glasses. The bullet plowed a furrow in his pocket but the steel deflected the bullet which otherwise might have penetrated the upper part of his body. Mr. Hanson seems to be having a series of narrow escapes, as the week previous his clothing was stripped from his body when it caught in the flywheel of a gasoline engine, but he escaped injury.

Funeral Services Will Be Held On Thursday Afternoon For Albert Barz

KNOWN KLEMMME MAN AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS

Is Fatal For Albert Barz Died Monday Evening

Albert Barz, age 51 years, passed away at his home east of town Tuesday evening at about 10 o'clock, after a short illness. Mr. Barz suffered with a heart ailment for the past few years but appeared to be in good health. Sunday Mr. Barz suffered a stroke, which he gradually grew weaker until he passed quietly away Tuesday evening.

Mr. Barz was considered one of the best farmers of this community, but he was also greatly interested in the welfare of his community. He was active in church, school work and civic interests and during his brief but useful life he served as a director of the Klemme Creamery, the Hancock County Cooperative Oil Association, was the Vice President of the First National Bank and a member of the Klemme School Board.

In church work he served as treasurer of the building committee for the Reformed Church, served as Sunday School superintendent and was a member of the church choir. On January 14th, 1914, Albert Barz was united in marriage with Esther Hartbeck, and to this union were born one daughter, Mrs. Edmund Josten, and two sons, Milvern and Edward who live at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Barz began their married life on the Barz home where they resided for twenty years. About five years ago they built up a new, modern farm home just across the road north from the old homestead, where the family has since resided. At about that time Mr. Barz was not well and suffered with a heart ailment, and because of this condition thought well to build a new place on a smaller acreage in order to lighten his work.

He leaves besides his wife and children three sisters: Mrs. Henry C. Lau of Tracy, Minn.; Mrs. O. H. Back, Tracy, Minn.; Mrs. Lena Schroeder, Klemme; and five brothers: William J. of Garner; Herman Fred and Henry of Klemme, and Emil of Waterloo.

Funeral services are scheduled for Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock with the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch preaching the sermon. Burial will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Mrs. W. L. Thada Hostess To U-Delt-Em Bridge Club

Mrs. W. L. Thada was hostess of the U-Delt-Em club Thursday afternoon at her home. The guests were asked to come wearing something backwards. Upon arriving, the contest started, each guest writing down just what each had on backwards. Mrs. Fred J. Arnold missed the most, so won the prize. Mrs. A. J. Kudje won the prize for not having her name on the travel prize, while Mrs. P. M. Wilson won the prize for the score reading the largest amount backwards.

Pop corn, apples and fudge were served later in the afternoon, while the guests spent the time visiting.

Jolly Time Club Met At Clarence Lemke Home

The Jolly Time Club met Sunday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lemke. The evening was spent in playing five hundred. Mrs. Austin and Orville Stokesbury won high prizes and Mrs. Cecil Bridges and Mr. Austin won low scores. Lunch was served by the hostess.

Art Welmeyer has remodeled that part of his store basement formerly used by Ned Howard for a shoe repair shop, into a convenient display room for odds and ends of Linoleum, small rugs, window shades and other merchandise. Mr. Welmeyer has constructed a rack in which is kept a large number of window shades in many widths and styles. Curtain rods and fixtures are also carried in stock. Welmeyer's shade stock is one of the largest in North Iowa and hundreds of shades are always in stock.

SALES TAX COLLECTIONS PASS $1,600,000 MARK

Three Month Report Shows Unusual Amount Of Early Payments

DES MOINES -- Reflecting a greater-than-normal volume of early returns, Iowa's state sales tax collections passed the $1,600,000 mark for the July, August and September quarter Thursday, the state sales tax division said.

The income exceeds comparable figures for both the preceding quarter and the summer period a year ago, the report showed. Returns thus far tabulated total 30,332 and collections aggregate $1,639,761. On the corresponding date last quarter, 25,365 merchants had paid $1,484,985, the report added. Receipts from 24,395 merchants on the same date a year ago totaled $1,563,742. The division collects sales taxes from approximately 65,000 Iowa retail firms.

Sales and income tax proceeds are used to pay old age pensions, homestead tax refunds and to finance the states emergency relief program.

SCHOOL TO SPONSOR DRIVE TO ENLARGE LOCAL BAND

Backed by an unusually active Music Mothers Club and encouraged by a widespread interest in school band work, the music department of the Klemme Public Schools is sponsoring a drive for a bigger and better school band.

A census is being taken through the school this week to determine just how many students are interested in band work and how many instruments are available. Other schools not any larger than Klemme are supporting bands of forty or more members and Director M. C. Batchelder believes that a band that size is altogether possible for our school.

Free instruction is offered both for beginners and advanced pupils in the Klemme schools and it is felt that everyone who has an instrument or can get one should take part. The band has made fine progress in the little more than two years since it was organized but a larger instrumentation is needed in order to do justice to the type of music the Class C bands are expected to play.

DAIRYMEN CAN'T AFFORD TO TRADE BEANS FOR OIL MEAL

The "dice are loaded" against the dairyman expecting to milk cows this winter if he plans to sell soybeans from his farm and buy back soybean meal, confirms C. Y. Cannon of the Dairy Husbandry Department at Iowa State College.

"If soybean meal to be used for dairy cows could be delivered to the farm for $1.25 a hundred, the farmer would have to get 75 cents a bushel for his beans--and this exchange is impossible," Cannon believes.

Soybeans are the only home-grown feed that can replace the large amounts of fat given off by the cow in her milk, hence the high feeding value of the raw bean to the dairy cow.

The fat has been removed from the soybean meal, he explains.

Milk flow is generally maintained at higher levels when soybeans are included in standard rations. This is one of the reasons why cows at the college are nearly always fed soybeans.

Hunters Plentiful Pheasants Scarce

PHEASANT SHOOTING WAS NOT UP TO STANDARD OF PAST YEARS

North Iowa closed a three day open season on pheasants Monday, after a closed period of three years.

Hunters reported shooting "just fair" and in most instances was far from being as good as in past years. High winds during the opening days was a factor in protecting the birds, but many hunters went home without birds or a small bag.

Couple Married Tuesday Will Live On Farm Northwest Of Klemme

JOHN WALTER STRAIN

Funeral services for John W. Strain were held at the U. B. Church in Ventura, Monday afternoon, November 7th, with the Rev. Z. Haugham in charge.

John W. Strain was born of Irish parentage on a farm near Madison, Wisconsin, March 26th, 1868.

When a small child he moved with his parents to Franklin County, Iowa, where he completed his common school education and grew to manhood.

In February, 1892, at the age of 24, John Strain was married to Maud Patton at Geneva, Iowa. A few years later they purchased a farm in Union township, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa, where they have lived for the past 33 years.

Mr. Strain was a quiet, hard working man and a good neighbor. Through both good times and bad times, his farming operations seemed to succeed and he took pride in improving his farm.

Some months ago his heart began to trouble him, and on Friday, November 4th, his end came from valvular heart disease. He reached the age of 70 years, 7 months and 5 days.

He leaves, besides his wife, one son, Hugh Strain, who is married and lives in a separate home on the same farm; also two sisters in California.

Interment was made near other relatives in the Hampton Cemetery. The following neighbors carried his casket to its final resting place: Fred Barz, Einar Christensen, Chas. Smith, Emmons Cannon, Walter Skene and Claud Miller.

Arthur Welmeyer, Klemme funeral director, was in charge of the services. (Note: The above obituary was unintentionally left out of the paper last week. Editor.)

CLARENCE LENZ AND RUBY NIELSEN WED AT BEAUTIFUL CEREMONY

Are On Wedding Trip To Ozark And Other Points Of Interest

The marriage of Mr. Clarence Lenz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Lenz, of north of Klemme, and Miss Ruby Nielsen, daughter of Martin Nielsen of Forest City, took place Tuesday, November 15th, at 4 o'clock at the home of the bridegroom's parents on their farm near here.

Preceding the ceremony, Irene Nonnweiler, cousin of the bride, sang, "O' Promise Me." To the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March played by Gladys Greiman, cousin of the groom, the bridal couple attended by Miss Pearl Nielsen, sister of the bride, and Clarence Kluckhohn, a mutual friend, took their places before an improvised arch of blue and white in the center of which were two white wedding bells. On either side of the arch were blue and white tapers and a basket of chrysanthemums in the background added to the setting.

Rev. William Huenemann, pastor of the Peace Reformed Church, officiated using the single ring ceremony following which Irene Nonnweiler sang, "I Love You Truly."

The bride wore a skipper blue wool dress with a belted jacket, made with box sleeves and a small collar of slate gray crushed fur. Her hat and accessories were navy blue. She wore a corsage of deep hued snap dragons and white swanonia. The bridegroom wore a navy blue suit. The bridesmaid wore a flecked gray, wool dress, made with black pointed velvet pointed vestee. Her hat and accessories were black. She wore a corsage of wine and coral snap dragons. The best man wore an oxford gray suit.

Following the ceremony a three course dinner was served to thirty guests, including members of the families and a few intimate friends. The tables were decorated with blue and white streamers and candles with the two tier wedding cake as the center piece at the bride's table. Waitresses were Irene Nonnweiler, Iris Fischer, Frances Schultz and Gladys Greiman. Between courses Pearl Nielsen read an original poem in honor of the bride and groom and Irene Nonnweiler sang, "The Old Rugged Cross."

The bridal couple left for a week's wedding trip which will take them to the Ozark region and other points of interest.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lenz live at the home of the bridegroom's parents until they go to house-keeping on the Lenz farm northwest of Klemme which is now rented but will be vacated in March.

The bride was born at Miller but grew to womanhood in Forest City. She graduated from the Forest City High School and for the past four years has been employed in the Graham Store in that city.

The bridegroom was born at Garner. He attended the Garner High School and Hamilton's Business School at Mason City. Since that time he has been associated with his father on the farm.

SO BEAT THEIR WINGS

The wings of the tiny humming bird will flap as many as 200 times a second while in flight, but the rate is greatly decreased for larger birds. Sparrows, for instance, do 13 strokes a second and the Pelican has been clocked at only one and one-sixteenth strokes.

Rail Reorganization Predicted Following Denial of Wage Cut

By Joseph W. La Bine

COMMITTEEMEN LANDIS, STACY AND MILLIS
A cut would be ineffective, detrimental. (See TRANSPORTATION).

Transportation

In the opinion of three experts, American railroads have no right to cut 15 per cent from pay checks of 930,000 employees because: (1) it would be a stop-gap measure at best, only reducing the standard of living at a time when business in general is coming back; (2) the railroads' financial problem is still of short term aspect, having been critical less than a year; (3) although railway wages have not fluctuated so badly as wages in other industries, they have not been advancing proportionately so fast as in other industries; (4) a flat 15 per cent wage cut would not be equitable, since smaller roads—which are in worse shape—would derive less benefit than the larger, more prosperous lines.

This was the gist of a 40,000-word opinion handed down by President Roosevelt's emergency fact-finding commission after three weeks of deliberation. Board members: Chief Justice Walter P. Stacy of the North Carolina Supreme court; Dean James M. Landis of Harvard law school, once chairman of the securities and exchange commission; Professor Harry A. Millis, University of Chicago economist and former member of the national labor relations board.

Though offering a well-considered opinion, the commission gave no help to sorely pressed railroads. Only tangible result is that some solution of America's entire rail problem will probably be speeded. Possibilities. (1) Wholesale reorganizations, combines and abandonment of lines to avoid duplicated service, a program which the interstate commerce commission must approve, and which would probably decrease railroad labor employment; (2) agreement with labor for a temporary, smaller pay cut; (3) federal financial assistance, which would only pile higher the already high interest charges and would offer only temporary relief.

Reorganization is the most likely solution. Already pending before the I. C. C. when the fact-finding commission reported were proposals for such plans. In the Northwest, stockholders of Chicago & North Western railroad wanted merger with the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific line. In the Southwest, an I. C. C. examiner recommended reorganization of the Missouri Pacific and consolidation of all properties now operated as the Missouri Pacific system. In the deep South, the Gulf, Mobile & Northern line wanted merger with the Mobile & Ohio road.

Domestic

Opponents of the administration's foreign policy have long criticized Secretary of State Cordell Hull for censuring Japanese encroachment on U. S. affairs in the Orient, meanwhile allowing Mexico to expropriate U. S.-owned oil lands. Secretary Hull's answer has been that Mexico's problem may best be settled by arbitration, not through a hostile attitude that may destroy Western hemisphere peace. The latest Mexican step has been seizure of a headquarters building occupied by Standard Oil subsidiaries, an act which brought only feeble protest from U. S. Ambassador Joseph Daniels ("I made representations"). But if the U. S. hopes to stave off Fascism in the Western hemisphere by its kid-glove policy toward Mexico, it may be doomed to disappointment. Although President Lazaro Cardenas once said his country would sell oil only to democratic nations, he has just announced consummation of a contract to sell several million dollars' worth in Rome. This, marking the birth of friendly trade relations between Italy and Mexico, gives Fascism another wedge into the New world.

Foreign

After the peace of Munich, France's Premier Edouard Daladier went to great lengths justifying his position before the senate and chamber of deputies. He won confidence by assuring Frenchmen that if Munich's treaty was a capitulation—which he denied—France would never again capitulate. But Premier Daladier's promise is not borne out in fact. At the Marseille convention of his Radical-Socialist party he outlawed communists from the government, plainly a move to curry favor with communist-hating Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini. Many observers believe this decision shows Premier Daladier is frantically grasping for a straw, since by repudiating the communist party he throws away a large part of his Popular Front support. Not only will the premier lose his next election, but France will probably break off her treaty with communistic Russia and thereby become isolated prey for Italy and Germany.

Rumania's complete shift to Nazification marks another step in Germany's economic invasion of southeastern Europe. Acting under orders from King Carol, the Rumanian government has proclaimed 100 per cent totalitarian principles in the hope that Germany will respect its territorial integrity in Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's "drive to the east." Since Czechoslovakia and Hungary are already pro-Nazi, Germany's economic orbit is extending itself with little difficulty.

Utilities

New Deal dams and power plants have offered public utilities serious competition, forcing down their prices and creating an unfriendly breach between electricity executives and the administration. One government power project not yet started is the St. Lawrence waterway, which President Roosevelt praised during September when the war scare first began. At that time, partly because he feared a lack of power reserve, partly because such a shortcoming might be good advertising for a St. Lawrence project, the President appointed a commission under Louis Johnson, assistant secretary of war.

SECRETARY JOHNSON
The war department made peace.

When the commission reported recently, it failed to mention St. Lawrence waterway plans. But it made bigger and more puzzling news by drawing executives of 14 large utilities to Washington and getting their promise to start expanding. If this was a peace gesture, it was overshadowed by explanations that utility expansion is an important step in the government's defense program and a healthy move toward business recovery.

The program: In 15 areas (all east of the Mississippi) utilities will spend an immediate $350,000,000, boosting it to $2,000,000,000 if power consumption increases normally the next two years. Only government function will be Reconstruction Finance corporation aid in refinancing securities.

Though generally regarded as an optimistic sign of recovery, utility expansion has been minimized in some quarters. The 1,000,000 new kilowatts in generating capacity is only a 3 per cent boost in U. S. power potentiality, considerably below the average increase in good business years.

International

At best, Germany, Italy and Japan are unnatural bedfellows with nothing in common except totalitarianism and a grudge against the world. Flushed by her imperialistic victory at Munich, there is every reason to think Germany might abandon Italian and Japanese alliances if they stood in the way of her march to world power. Already Gen. Franz Ritter von Epp has pointed out that Germany demands return of every pre-war colony without exception.

First step in this direction has been taken by Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler in presenting African colonial demands to Great Britain and France. What Hitler wants—and probably will get—is return of Togoland, Cameroons, Southwest Africa and Tanganyika, held under League of Nations mandate by Britain and France since the Versailles treaty.

If they pay this price for peace, Britain and France will also agree to German arms equality. British-French gain through such a transaction would be German friendship and an understanding that Italy had better confine her imperialism to the Mediterranean area on pain of combined German-Franco-British opposition. Moreover, Il Duce would be forced to withdraw from Spain.

Next Der Fuehrer may turn his eyes to Japan, which now controls one-time German islands forfeited after the World war. Since Hitler's aggressive imperialism makes one conquest merely an appetizer for the next, moreover since self-pitying Germany looks angrily at any nation which controls large territories and resources, Japan may find her Chinese conquest threatened.

Nor do observers overlook the chance of a German-Italian breach over Hungary's Czechoslovakian

GERMANY IN AFRICA

Of onetime German possessions (shown in black) France holds mandates for Togoland (1) and the Cameroons (2); Great Britain has minor interest in both, British South Africa (5) holds mandate for Southwest Africa (3), and Britain a mandate for Tanganyika (4). Angola (6) is held by Portugal.

claims, now handed to the Rome-Berlin axis for settlement. Mussolini, Hungary's friend, wants Czechoslovakia dissolved, moreover wants Hungary to get the common border with Poland which she desires. But Hitler, temporarily angry with Hungary and anxious to preserve a path to the east through Czechoslovakia, will fight partition.

Defense

Knotted inseparably in recent news have been Japan's conquest of China and world democracies' attempts to strengthen their military-economic positions against German-Italo-Jap aggression. Though England and the U. S. have been rubbing noses in their trade pact negotiations, autumn of 1938 will be remembered primarily as the period when America first stood up and barked at modern imperialism.

Within 24 hours two barks came from Washington. First was President Roosevelt's precedent-shattering condemnation of nations employing force (Japan), exile (Germany) and repression (Italy) as instruments of national policy. Next day, on the heels of Japan's conquest of Hankow, the state department made public a 21-day-old protest to Tokyo against violation of China's "open door" policy.

This was but percussion in the new American overture of preparedness. Chiming in are plans to strengthen military and naval forces so that "the Western hemisphere may work out its own interrelated salvation."

Thus, if Britain and France deny it, the U. S. admits Japan has become the Far East's No. 1 power and bids fair to dominate the Pacific unless stopped. Although Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek will continue battling Japan in the hope his foe will eventually commit military and economic suicide, there is little likelihood that China's door will be reopened to Western nations unless Japan wants it.

'Quotes'

JULEAN ARNOLD, U. S. commercial attaché at Shanghai: "Unless Americans awaken to what is taking place in the Orient, this nation will lose its place as a Pacific power and also it will lose its lucrative trade with China."

U. S. SEN. EDWARD R. BURKE on the 1940 election: "Garner has just what the country will need in 1940, lots of common sense. And sentiment to put him in the White House is growing by leaps and bounds."

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

NEW YORK.—To administer the wages and hours law, which recently went into effect, Elmer F. Andrews left a job which gave him shorter hours and more wages.

E. F. Andrews Has Taken on Full-Time Job

As New York state industrial commissioner, his salary was $12,000, and he could get by nicely with a seven or eight-hour day. This job pays $10,000, and, considering its volume of detail, its complications, its novelty and its controversial entanglements, it looks like a 24-hour shift for Mr. Andrews.

He is a professional engineer, born in New York, earnest and diligent, a glutton for detail, living moderately in Flushing with his wife and three children until his removal to Washington. In addition to his five years as state industrial commissioner, having succeeded his former chief, Miss Frances Perkins, in that office, his experience in wage and hour adjustments has been with industrial concerns and chambers of commerce.

After his graduation from Rensselaer Polytechnic institute, he was pilot in the U. S. army air service in the World war. He built railroads and factories in Cuba and engaged in construction work in New York City, planning civic improvements for the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, among other large-scale enterprises. In these years he engaged in compensation studies for various industrial groups. He was labor adviser for the National Labor board in the coal mining regions of Kentucky, Alabama and Pennsylvania.

Never belligerent, Mr. Andrews has been more of an arbitrator than a fighter, although he did take on certain employment agencies for a battle when he was industrial commissioner. He swings no nightstick, and tells the employers this isn't going to hurt them in the least. He is a New Dealer, but goes to Washington with perhaps more political detachment than any similarly placed official down there. Mr. Andrews is 43 years old.

THE late Newton D. Baker liked to discourse on the importance of "keeping intellectually liquid," and free from embarrassing alliances and commitments.

J. H. Amen Distinguished Non-Joiner

John Harlan Amen, runner-up for Thomas E. Dewey in the national racket-busting tournament, is that way, too. Assigned to the sensational crime and graft clean-up in Brooklyn, he allows the reporters to drag out of him the admission that he "never belonged to anything."

As an assistant United States attorney, he has been netting racketeers steadily since the United States put teeth in the Sherman act in 1934. In view of J. Edgar Hoover's revelations as to the overlapping of crime and venal politics, Mr. Amen's political detachment is interesting. It is also interesting in our new realization that federalization of our government has been in part due to the failure of the states really to govern. Mr. Amen, like Mr. Dewey, has made his name in this overlapping zone of state and federal authority.

He is a grave, aloof aristocrat, with an academic background of Phillips-Exeter, Princeton and Harvard. He is a son-in-law of President Cleveland, with a residence in Park avenue, great intellectual and social reserve.

THIS writer happened to be in Italy when the fascist regime was emerging and saw underprivileged youth joyously engaged in beating up hold-outs and lagards and slashing up the library of an old professor who had indiscreetly affirmed his faith in democracy.

Jas. Marshall Alarmed Over Jobless Youth

James Marshall, president of the New York board of education, is alarmed about our jobless youth, aged from 18 to 24. He says it was this condition which made fascism in other countries and we had better watch our step. He proposes a drastic national solution.

Mr. Marshall is a lawyer by profession, the son of the late Louis Marshall, one of the most eminent lawyers in New York's history. He was appointed to the board of education in 1935 and became president of the board last June. Modern Debs Celebrate by Drinking Milk

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

A FEW days ago in a popular social column of a leading New York paper this item appeared: "The pretty, blond debutante, Lesley Bogert of Newport, arrived at a popular night club after midnight last night with a party of friends. The party all drank champagne with the exception of Miss Bogert, who followed the current debutante milk fad."

And there you have it. Society's younger, pampered darlings have more sense than you would believe! The majority of debutantes, post and present, are in their 'teens and they go to more parties in a week than you and I are likely to attend in a month or two months!

What would happen to the health and beauty of these young girls if they sipped cocktails and highballs at every party?

A large percentage of New York's debutantes have hopes of careers even as you and I. They are not going to jeopardize their chances of a successful career or a good marriage. They protect their beauty by getting plenty of rest—even if they have to sleep in daytime hours—and by carefully watching what they eat and drink.

Beauty Requires Proper Diet

Young beauty, it is true, can stand a lot more wear and tear than older beauty. Nature does allow a quick rejuvenation of tired tissue, and muscles of the youthful body naturally have greater duration of strength. That is why many young girls feel that they can eat and drink what they desire, and sleep when they want to, without losing any of their fresh beauty.

They rely on strong facial muscles, unstrained tissue, and other youthful assets, to see them through. But woe to those who do not realize that nature demands consideration or she just falls down on her job! Those girls find themselves tired looking at 20, and completely faded by 30 when any American girl should be her most beautiful!

What you feed your body with is of primary importance. From milk—which is almost the perfect food—your body can draw nourishment and provide strength. It is one of the most important items of any girl's diet unless she is allergic to it. It keeps the bloom in her cheeks, wards off tooth decay and other diseases, keeps her bones strong and her eyes clear.

How much wiser for young girls to sip milk at parties than to dull their senses, and poison their blood with strong drinks. I'm no Grundy, girls, but my hat goes off to Miss Bogert and girls like her who plan for the future!

What is your daily grooming? Check up on it by sending a self-addressed, stamped (3-cent) envelope care of this newspaper for my leaflet—Don'ts of Good Grooming.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

If you have been down in the dumps and life has grown humdrum it is time you changed your coiffure!

An outstanding New York physician urges women to occasionally change their hairdress. He claims it boosts their dejected spirits and gives them a new outlook on life. "It is almost miraculous," he says, "how a new and becoming hair style can give a woman fresh beauty and thus change the current course of her life. Her interest in things somehow becomes stimulated anew and in a short time the period of dejection passes."

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vitality to enjoy life and assist in calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. Do kidneys sometimes lag in their work? Do you sometimes feel a dull ache in the back? Do you sometimes feel a sense of nervousness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength? Other signs of kidney and bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wise when these symptoms appear. DOAN'S PILLS

When Lincoln Spoke at Gettysburg "Three Score and 15 Years Ago"

ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Western Newspaper Union.

THREE score and fifteen years ago a tall, gaunt, sad-eyed man stood upon a platform overlooking the scene of one of the world's great battles and began to speak. His voice was thin, high-pitched in striking contrast to the rich, full tones of the trained orator who had preceded him.

First that previous speaker had held his audience spellbound with his eloquence. But as his speech went on and on and on—for an hour and 57 minutes, in fact—people began to weary. It was something of a relief when he finished and there was a certain revival of interest when the next speaker arose and drew him- self to his full height.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal;

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether this nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of this war. We have come to dedicate a portion of this field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that this nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have left for us to do. As for the dead, rest in peace. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

erty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," the shrill voice proclaimed.

People leaned forward to listen, for it was difficult for some of them to hear. A minute passed . . . two minutes . . . then:

"That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

With those words the speaker sat down. His audience looked at each other in amazement. Why, he had stopped just when they thought he was beginning! Who ever heard of a man making such a short speech!

They were right. For there were exactly 272 words in that speech.

As he sat down there was but very little applause and that was apparently for the speaker, because he was the President of the United States, and not for the words he had uttered. But in that they were wrong. For the speech to which they had just listened was Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, that has been called "a classic which will endure so long as the English language is spoken."

A Disappointed Audience.

In the light of that statement—with which few, if any, will dissent—it seems strange indeed that the people who heard it uttered 75 years ago were so little impressed by it. Yet such was the case. Dr. William E. Barton in his book, "Lincoln at Gettysburg" (a 254-page book about a 272-word speech!) says:

"People were disappointed. After Everett's oration, the President's speech seemed almost no speech at all. . . . That night they told of hearing Everett and of seeing the President. Incidentally some of them mentioned the President had uttered a few remarks; yes, they had heard the President. But while they were glad to have heard him not many of them at the time said very much about the President's speech.

A "few remarks" indeed! Yet, the people who heard him were not the only ones who felt that way about it. Another of Lincoln's biographers, Ward H. Lamon, has recorded Lincoln's own dissatisfaction with his speech. . . . how he himself called it "a flat failure" and added, after he returned to Washington, "I tell you, that speech fell on the audience like a wet blanket. I am distressed about it. I ought to have prepared it with more care."

But he was wrong about that, just as he was wrong when, in the speech itself, he said "the world will little note nor long remember what we say here." Perhaps the world "little noted" at the time what he said there. But certainly it seems destined to "long remember."

However, Lincoln wasn't the "world's worst prophet" in this respect. That title must go to the editor of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot and Union who wrote an editorial in which he said: "The President succeeded on this occasion because he acted without sense and without constraint in a panorama that was gotten up more for the benefit of his party than for the glory of the nation and the honor of the dead. . . . We pass over the silly remarks of the President; for the credit of the nation we are willing that the veil of oblivion shall be dropped over them and that they shall no more be repeated or thought of."

Of course, that was the fulmination of a bitterly partisan newspaper. But the Harrisburg editor wasn't alone in his attitude. For, as Barton records, "The Chicago Times and the Register in Springfield and other partisan newspapers were equally caustic and equally unjust."

Lincoln Overlooked.

One of the most interesting examples of failure of the editors to appreciate the speech was that of the New York Times. The following day it carried an editorial under the head "Two Great Orations" which said: "We devote a broadside of this morning's Times to the publication of two orations which we are sure will command the attention of the day." It then went on to discuss the beauty of language and the eloquent voices of "two masters of oratory." One of these was Edward Everett, who had spoken at the dedication of the National cemetery at Gettysburg. The other was NOT Abraham Lincoln at the same ceremony.

It was Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who had just returned from England and on the evening of the day before had addressed a great crowd at the Academy of Music in his home city of Brooklyn.

To the credit of Edward Everett, however, let it be said that he was one of the few—possibly the only one—who recognized the greatness of Lincoln's speech at the time. He wrote to Lincoln the next day "I should be glad if I could flatter myself that I came as near to the central idea of the occasion in two hours as you did in two minutes."

Tributes From England.

But if the greatness of the Gettysburg speech was not appreciated at the time it was uttered, recognition was not long in coming. Nor has that recognition been confined to his fellow-countrymen. It was Lord Charmwood of England who characterized the speech as "a classic which will endure as long as the English language is spoken." And another Englishman, Lord Curzon, in a lecture at the University of Cambridge paid it this tribute: "I escape the task of deciding which is the masterpiece of modern English eloquence by awarding the prize to an American. The Gettysburg Address is far more than a pleasing piece of occasional oratory. It is a marvelous piece of English composition. It is a pure well of English undefiled. Lincoln's words are among the glories and treasures of mankind."

EDWARD EVERETT

If the Gettysburg Address helped make Lincoln immortal, it is one of the ironies of fate that it also helped thrust into obscurity Edward Everett, the man who had been cast in the role of "chief orator" at the dedication of the battlefield, so that he is now something of a "forgotten man" and he lives in memory mainly as "the other man who spoke at Gettysburg."

Everett was born in Dorchester, Mass., April 11, 1794, a member of one of the leading families of New England. After several years of travel in Germany and England he returned to this country to occupy the chair of Greek literature at Harvard and to become editor of the North American Review. One of the earliest examples of the "scholar in politics," Everett became successively congressman, governor of Massachusetts, minister plenipotentiary to England and, after a brief interim as president of Harvard, secretary of state in President Fillmore's cabinet.

But his chief claim to fame lies in his being a vigorous champion of American institutions when it was the fashion in Europe to sneer at our democracy, and an equally vigorous champion of honesty in public affairs and of social justice. He was a resolute opponent of white occupation of Indian lands without the consent of the red man. To him also was due the preservation of a sound currency in the panic of 1837 and the establishment of the first board of education in the United States. No mean record of accomplishment, this, and to it should be added the fact that he was considered the greatest orator in the country at that time. He had staked out his claim to that distinction early in life. In 1824, while he was teaching at Harvard, he was chosen to address the Phi Beta Kappa society at Cambridge on the progress of literature in the United States.

Tribute to Lafayette.

Everyone expected him to deliver the usual scholarly address for scholarly men. But one circumstance helped change that. In the audience was Marquis de Lafayette, now an old man, who had come back to America to receive the tribute of the people for whose liberties he had fought nearly a half century earlier.

Near the end of Everett's speech, he turned to the old soldier and launched into a tribute to him with such fervor and eloquence that his audience was held spellbound, silent, for several minutes. Then it burst into a roar of handclapping and cheering. Everett had said what every American felt in his heart about Lafayette and he had done it so gracefully and expressively that his speech became the sensation of the hour, not only in this country but in France as well.

Helped Save Mt. Vernon.

In 1853 he used his eloquence in a cause which helped spread his fame. He became interested in the effort to raise $200,000 to purchase Mount Vernon and preserve it as a national shrine. He prepared an address on the character of Washington and delivered this address more than 120 times in various cities all over the country. People came from afar to hear him—not because there was anything new in what he had to tell them about the Father of His Country but because of the grace and style of the orator's presentation of his subject. As a result Everett turned over to the women who were trying to save Mount Vernon nearly $70,000 and did more, perhaps, than any other individual in accomplishing their purpose.

Early in the Civil war he began delivering speeches to arouse enthusiasm for the Northern cause. They were not finished orations—they were stirring calls to action. He became the most powerful platform orator of his day. So it was only natural that those in charge of the dedication of the National cemetery at Gettysburg should have thought of him first when selecting an orator for the occasion.

His long and distinguished career came to an end January 15, 1865—three months too early to see the triumph of the cause which he had so ably championed.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

IT IS not often that a mere matter of stitchery strikes a national note with Americans, but here is something from a school teacher that may touch your pride a bit. She says, "Your Book 2 on Gifts and Embroidery interests me because it is the only thing I have seen on this subject that shows simply and clearly how to use a little originality in hand work. The women of all nations but ours find pleasure in expressing their own ideas in embroidery and needle crafts."

Here is another free-hand embroidery design that should be as much fun as those in our book. This attractive border is suggested here for a bed jacket. You will have no difficulty in finding a pattern for a jacket as they are quite the thing to wear over sleeveless nighties. Your free-hand border will dress it up for a Christmas gift.

If the jacket is pale pink, the rows of running stitches might be in several tones of rose. The cross stitches could be in deep rose and turquoise blue to simulate flowers. The long and short stitches, shown at A and B, should then be done in apple green. Lines may be drawn with a ruler as a guide to keep the rows straight, and evenly spaced dots may be made to indicate the cross stitches beginning the spacing at the corners of the design.

Are you ready for Christmas; birthdays; and the next church bazaar? Do you turn time into money with things to sell? Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2 has helped thousands of women. If your home is your hobby you will also want Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator. Order by number, enclosing 25 cents for each book. If you order both books, a leaflet on quilts with 36 authentic stitches will be included free. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

Milestones in Development Of the Automobile Industry

November is the big month in the automobile industry, with the displays of new models all over the country. Each November is another milestone in the development of this great but infant business, which typifies American industrial genius.

In a period of only 30 years, from 1900, the auto came from nothing to top the list in total value of manufactured products. The millions of streamlined cars speeding along our great highways today are the direct descendants of the primitive motor-driven buggies of the first of the century.

The first experimental automobile was built in Germany in 1885 by Carl Benz, and consisted of a gasoline motor installed in a sort of tricycle. In this country, some 10 years later, Charles E. Duryea and Elwood Haynes built creditable gasoline-driven vehicles. Electric and steam cars began to appear at this time too.

The first automobile contest on record took place in 1895 under the auspices of the Chicago Times-Herald. Thirty-one cars raced over the 54-mile course and Duryea won in 8 hours and 23 minutes, an average of almost 7 miles an hour. Five years later, in a 50-mile road race on Long Island, A. L. Riker averaged nearly 25 miles an hour. That was considered tremendous speed.

Most of the early cars were built on the lines of the horse-drawn buggy. Even the first standard designs retained the curved dash-board and the whip-socket, and many drivers wished they could use their whips on the engines. That was the age when bystanders urged motorists to "get a horse."

In 1900 organized production got under way. In 1910 front doors, windshields and folding tops were introduced. World war inflation of purchasing power gave the industry a tremendous boost in 1914, and another boost came in 1922, which brought balloon tires, wide adoption of the time payment system, four-wheel brakes, and the start of the general switch from open to closed cars. The industry went over the billion dollar mark during the war, and over the five billion dollar mark in 1929.

But the total of its economic effect goes into astronomical figures, when steel, rubber, concrete for roads, and other commodities are considered, not to mention the billions upon billions which it has caused to be paid in wages. The automobile is the classic example of what American industry can do.—Compiled from National Encyclopedia.

Funeral Services Held Thursday For Prominent Klemme Farmer

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD LAST THURSDAY FOR ALBERT BARZ

Klemme Farmer Was Active In Community And Church Work

Funeral services were conducted at the Klemme Reformed Church Thursday afternoon for Mr. Albert Barz, well known Klemme farmer and an active worker in community affairs.

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch based his sermon on Joshua 23, 14. Mrs. L. Thada and Mrs. A. H. Dulmes sang "Tell Mother I'll Be There," and "Safe In The Arms of Jesus."

Interment was made in the family lot at the Klemme Cemetery. Mr. Barz's five brothers, and Leslie Hartbeck carried him to his final resting place.

The following obituary was read from the pulpit by Rev. Grosshuesch:

Obituary

Albert Barz was born April 1st, 1887, at Klemme, Iowa. He was brought to holy baptism by his parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. August Barz, in the Ell Town Reformed Church. During his boyhood days he attended the Klemme Public Schools, and the Bible and Confirmation Class of his church. He was confirmed with the class of 1902 by Rev. A. Muehlbauer.

As a youth he remained at home working on his father's farm. He was married to Miss Esther Hartbeck, January 14th, 1914. Had been married until the coming January the couple could have celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary. The parents of Mr. Barz moved to Klemme in 1914, leaving Albert in charge of the home farm. Three children were born in this home: and were reared in the fear and nurture of the Lord.

About five years ago Mr. Barz became ill, and when it was found that he had heart ailment, he discontinued strenuous work, rented the home farm, and built a new home and farm buildings on his adjoining 80. Since March, 1934, the family has lived in this new home.

Besides managing his farm Mr. Barz took an active interest in community and church affairs. He was a director of the Klemme National Bank, of which institution he was elected vice president, when his father resigned from the office. He was elected to the school board about ten years ago and served faithfully until the time of his death. He was also director of the Farmers Oil Company and the Klemme Creamery. In each of these institutions his counsel and help will be greatly missed. He was not a man to seek honors, but rather a man whose opinion was respected, and whose help and counsel was sought. He served his church ably as Sunday School Supt. for a period of five years. As a member of the building committee he was elected treasurer of the building fund. He was a charter member of the Men's Chorus, and of the Mixed Choir and Chorus. He attended church and Sunday School with his family regularly. He enjoyed a good reputation throughout our community. His many friends will remember him as a quiet, industrious man, honest and consistent in every respect. In every public office to which he was elected, he served humbly and faithfully.

Two years ago Mr. and Mrs. Barz enjoyed a trip to the Yellowstone Park, hoping that a short change might prove beneficial to his health. Last Sunday Mr. Barz was in his usual place in the church choir, spent the afternoon at home in pleasant conversation with his family, and in the evening he visited his old home place where the Leslie Hartbeck family now resides. After arriving home he suffered a stroke at about 10:30 o'clock and twenty-four hours later, Monday evening, Nov. 14th, 1938, he passed away. He died at the age of 51 years 7 months and 13 days.

Surviving him and mourning his death are his wife; three children, Mrs. Edmond Josten, Milvern and Edward Five brothers, William of Garner, Herman, Henry, and Fred of Klemme; and Emil of Wateloo. Three sisters, Mrs. Henry C. Lau, and Mrs. Otto Baack, Tracy, Minn., and Mrs. Lena Schroeder, Klemme.

Thanksgiving

We walk on starry fields of white
And do not see the daisies;
For blessings common in our sight
We rarely offer praises
Which for some supreme delight
To crown our lives with splendor,
And quite ignore our daily store
Of pleasures sweet and tender.

Our cares are bold, and push their way
Upon our thought and feeling;
They hang upon us all the day,
Our time from pleasure stealing.
So unobtrusive, many a joy
We pass by and forget it;
But every strives to own our lives,
And conquers if we let it.

There's not a day in all the year
But holds some hidden pleasure;
And looking back, joys oft appear
To bring the past's wide measure.
But blessings are like friends, I hold,
Who leave and labor near us;
We ought to raise our notes of praise
While living hearts can hear us.

Full many a blessing wears the guise
Of worry or of trouble;
Farseeing is the soul, and wise,
Who knows the mask is double
But he who has the faith and strength
To thank God for his sorrow,
Has found a joy without alloy
To gladden every morrow.

We ought to make the moments notes
Of happy, glad thanksgiving;
The hours and days a silent phrase
Of music we are living
And so the theme should swell and grow
As weeks and months pass o'er us,
And rise sublime at this good time,
A grand Thanksgiving chorus.

Good Old Iowa Soil Best Medium For Raising Crops, Says Scientist

CORN BELT FARMERS NEED NOT FEAR "SAW- DUST-WATER" FARMING

Growing plants in a water, sawdust and chemical culture is not a new and revolutionary practice nor a menace to Corn Belt farmers, concludes Dr. A. G. Norman of the Agronomy Department at Iowa State College.

The costs of building greenhouses and supplying the necessary heat, light and labor will restrict the production to out-of-season plants which can command quality prices, such as roses and tomatoes sold during the winter, explains Norman.

There's nothing new or mysterious about raising plants without using dirt. Supplying the necessary soil materials in water solutions has been a common practice with scientists for more than 60 years.

In fact, this is the way in which many of the trace elements, as boron and manganese, were studied.

Not much attention was usually paid to the yield of the experimental plants. Recent and highly publicized work deals with the balance necessary between various plant minerals to produce the highest possible yields.

These vat-grown plants have been stuffed with everything they need for growth and coddled from the cradle up.

Given all the water they require with the temperature carefully watched, plants grown in the soil with similar attention can also be made to produce huge yields, Norman says.

Every time an article appears in a national magazine describing dirtless farming and prophesying the doom of present agricultural methods, the Soils Department is flooded with letters.

The "new" industry is too often pictured in the wrong light, he believes.

Some persons seem to think that the prairie lands of Iowa will soon lie idle while "farmers" raise tomatoes in their back bedroom.

U. S. Turns to 'Price Policing'
In Anti-Monopoly Campaign

By Joseph W. La Bine

Business

Government prosecution of combinations in alleged restraint of trade was known as "trust-busting" in the days of President Benjamin Harrison. In 1890 the Sherman anti-trust law began hacking at financial octopi in what was shown to be a legitimate campaign to keep American industry from killing itself by mushroomed growth.

Modern trust-busting is an outgrowth of the New Deal. Its intended victim is not the monopolistic trust of bygone days, but usually a group of powerful corporations which dominate an industry. But though the 1938 model trust buster can be credited with success (17 victories, 12 cases still pending, out of 42 filed since March 4, 1933) he might also be charged with making political capital of his job.

Thus it has been hinted that Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, once an assistant attorney general, joined the anti-trust crusade last year largely in the hope of winning New York's Democratic gubernatorial nomination. If politics was the inspiration for some anti-trust suits, these same suits have now become such hot potatoes that a vanished political purpose does not justify the justice department's dropping them.

THURMAN ARNOLD

One possible example may be the trust case against the Aluminum Company of America.

To date this year-old investigation has failed to uncover much except a re-hash of testimony and evidence from the 1935 federal trade commission's probe, and a private litigation of a decade ago from which the company emerged with a clean bill of health.

Today's anti-trust division of the justice department has 90 lawyers compared with 15 in 1933, handling monopoly cases and proceedings connected with 31 other major acts of congress. Trust-busting boss is Thurman Arnold, whose fetish is investigating the price policies of industry. Says Mr. Arnold: "We are being forced to take control of inflexible price structures and coercions in restraint of trade today just as in 1933 we were forced to take control of the financing and marketing of securities."

Much interest now centers in the justice department's newly inaugurated suit against Delaware's Columbia Gas & Electric corporation for allegedly "conspiring to monopolize" the natural gas industry of Kentucky, Ohio, West Virginia and Michigan. But in accordance with his probe of price policies, Thurman Arnold is probably more interested in oil. Since crude oil prices recently plummeted in the wake of alleged over-production by refiners, both the President and Mr. Arnold favor a program for state control over oil production and refining.

Harking back to the trust-busting days when Standard Oil's case first made the U. S. monopoly-conscious, the new probe will examine every phase of the oil industry from production to marketing. Though oil men will welcome an intelligent government program to stabilize crude oil prices, observers fail to see great consistency between this program to raise prices, and other monopoly quizzes which prosecute men for allegedly raising prices.

Agriculture

Although U. S. department of agriculture officials admit export subsidies are not very effective in reducing wheat surpluses, the government has committed itself to "exporting 100,000,000 bushels by next July. Of 40,000,000 bushels thus far exported, 16 millions have been aided by subsidy payments from the federal surplus commodities corporation. All such sales have gone through regular trade channels.

But wheat export has become a disgusting business. Since every wheat-producing nation seems to have a surplus this year, the export market is glutted. In early November, Liverpool prices were the lowest since 1933-34. At such a time, the real purpose was obvious when AAA's Francis A. Wilcox left for Europe ostensibly to "study agricultural conditions." Observers are betting that Mr. Wilcox is really attempting to find European buyers for U. S. wheat, and that the government may enter business as a direct exporter of wheat.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace received encouragement for his "domestic dumping" farm program which congress will debate next January. Calling for government subsidy of surplus farm products for home consumption, the program has received "endorsement of objective" from Idaho's Sen. William E. Borah. Denouncing the economic puzzle that lets Americans starve in a land of plenty, Mr. Borah said: "I am informed that 25 per cent of our young men between the ages of 17 and 25 would be unfit for army service in case of war because of the want of nutrition during their youth."

Domestic

Last June 10 the U. S. business index (figured on a normal of 100) stood at about 76. By November 8 it had risen to 90 and as a result retailers throughout the country anticipate as big a Christmas shopping volume as last year. Actually, it should be better, because last year's November index—while comparable to this year's—was definitely on a down-hill slide that did not stop until well after January 1. On every financial page in the country there are encouraging signs, most important of which has been re-employment in the automobile industry. New York's auto show, touching off an unprecedented volume of motor sales, has given strength to most commodities. The only pessimist in this picture has been the weather man, whose Indian summer lasted well into November and thereby blocked the normal upsurge of retail buying.

International

Japan once offered an excuse for her Chinese aggression. To complaints that she had violated the nine-power treaty guaranteeing China's integrity, Tokyo used to answer that she had taken no territory for annexation, therefore had not violated the treaty. If someone charged her with violating the Kellogg-Briand pact against war, Japan answered that the pact said nothing about defensive war; by some mysterious definition, Nippon regarded her Chinese conquest as a defensive proposition.

Now that China is conquered, Japan feels safe to abandon excuses. Tokyo has stated officially that it may be necessary to repudiate the nine-power pact, which is almost tacit admission that she has both violated and abandoned the Kellogg-Briand accord. Moreover she has named the turncoat Chinese war lord, Gen. Wu Pei-Fu, as leader of a new central Chinese government which combines the old Nanking and Peiping units. Though annexation is not mentioned, China has been absorbed economically and politically by Tokyo.

The U. S. has been most stern in its protests, since Great Britain is too busy appeasing dictators to speak up in defense of her Chinese stake. To Secretary of State Cordell Hull's demands now come surly replies that the U. S. had better keep its hands off China or Japan will "take retaliatory measures."

This state of affairs is probably behind the latest U. S. anti-dictator outburst, more outspoken than its increasingly outspoken predecessors. Sumner Welles, under secretary of state, has given the world fresh notice that the U. S. is ready to protect not only itself but all the western hemisphere from "the doctrine of hatred" now threatening civilization.

The new American policy, a la Welles: "As a nation we will assure ourselves that we are in a position to defend ourselves from all aggression from whatever source it may arise, and to be prepared to join with our fellow democracies of the new world in preserving the western hemisphere safe from any threat of attack."

Heaped atop this plea for western hemisphere consolidation will be the eighth Pan-American conference, opening December 9 in Lima, Peru. Observers expect a U. S. delegation headed by Secretary Hull to furnish plenty of ear-burning thrusts at Japan, Italy and Germany.

Foreign

The European domination won at Munich by Germany and Italy is but a prelude to Hitler-Mussolini plans for relegating France and Great Britain into second-rate status. Still to come is a four-power pact, but first must come the groundwork in which France and Britain are fattening themselves for the slaughter:

ENGLAND sees growing resentment toward Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, who claims: "Our sole concern is to see that this country and her colonial communications are safe." But recalling successive British diplomatic defeats in Manchukuo, Ethiopia, Spain, China, Austria and Czechoslovakia, Chamberlain's foes wonder what he means by "safety." The real Chamberlain policy is appeasement of dictators at any cost. Thus the prime minister has forced a 345-138 approval of his Italian friendship pact in the house of commons. Thus, too, he has dropped Britain's elaborate defensive armament plan and urged the retirement of War Minister Leslie Hore-Belisha. Once active in opposing Spain's civil war, Great Britain must now grant belligerent rights to both Loyalists and Rebels. Still unfulfilled are Hitler's demands for return of war-mantled colonies and a 3-1 air domination over Great Britain. Although Britishers themselves look unkindly on Nazi colonial ambitions, it is known that English South Africans are more than willing to return mandated territory if it will avert war.

FRANCE, now torn by financial distress resulting from feverish rearmament, has welcomed Reichsfuehrer Hitler's offer of a 10 or 25-year truce. This is more groundwork behind the eventual four-power pact. In return for German renunciation of territorial claims (in Europe) against France, Paris would re-establish normal diplomatic relations with Italy (already accomplished) and possibly turn away from the League of Nations to live at the mercy of dictators. The only other alternative, now being politely suggested, is that Italy, Germany and Japan be lured back into the League by a "purge" of anti-dictator Geneva officials. Since France faces bankruptcy unless she can halt rearmament, any kind of peace is welcome. Still another sign of French capitulation is Premier Edouard Daladier's renunciation of Communist party support, a move which gains favor with Soviet-hating Nazi-Fascist states.

ITALY AND GERMANY are now so sure of their positions that they find it unnecessary to ask British-French advice on handling Czechoslovakia's minority problem. Although the treaty of Munich stipulated four-power action on Czech minority problems, Foreign Ministers Joachim von Ribbentrop and Count Galeazzo Ciano have just transferred a large part of Czechoslovakia to Hungary. For Germany, recent weeks have opened a wedge permitting a successful economic "drive to the east." For Italy they have brought Franco-British recognition of her Ethiopian conquest, placing Premier Mussolini's battle-won empire in good standing with Europe's highest diplomatic society. At best the highly touted four-power pact will be a mere formality for totalitarian states.

Religion

U. S. diplomatic relations with the Vatican were broken off 70 years ago on the ground that the Papal state no longer had a territorial domain and therefore did not deserve diplomatic status. Two years ago when Catholic Postmaster General James A. Farley was granted an audience with the Pope, there were rumors that diplomatic relations might be resumed. Not unnoticed is the spacious new Washington headquarters being built for the U. S. apostolic delegate, nor the fact that President Roosevelt entertained Chicago's Cardinal George Mundelein when the latter stopped off en route to Rome. Since U. S. Ambassador to Italy William Phelps displayed unusual assistance to Cardinal Mundelein on his arrival in Italy, and since the visit has drawn wide attention among Catholic churchmen, it is possible that U. S. Vatican diplomatic relations might be on the mend. Certain it is that Pope Pius XI sees eye to eye with Washington on what Secretary of State Cordell Hull calls "international lawlessness."

Trend

How the wind is blowing . . .

DOBBIN'S DECLINE.—U. S. department of agriculture figures show 11,163 horses and mules in the country, half as many as in 1915. Continued downward trend is expected.

MERRY CHRISTMAS.—Mutual savings banks in 17 states will distribute $54,429,205 in Christmas savings to 1,326,797 people just before Christmas. Deposits are almost $3,000,000 above last year.

FINE BUSINESS.—A New York woman driver has been fined for going too slowly, the first case of its kind in New York's history.

MEN AT WORK.—An Emporium (Pa.) WPA project has been suspended because improving business has recruited all unemployed laborers.

MEATY NOTE.—During 1938's first eight months, Americans ate 125,000,000 more pounds of meat than in 1937's first eight months.

Fitted, Lifted Waistlines

IF YOU want to have the very smart, tiny-waisted look, and to look slimmer than you are, by all means wear these two frocks, each with the high-at-the-middle line that emphasizes the slender, flattering silhouette. And if you want to wear really individual clothes, up-to-the-minute in fashion, of superior fabrics and becoming colors of your own selection, then make your own, with these very easy-to-follow designs, each of which is accompanied by a detailed sew chart.

Afternoon Dress.

Here's a lovely fashion that simply melts into your figure at the waistline, because the lifted midriff section is cut in one with the skirt panel in front. The bodice fits beautifully, thanks to scarcely perceptible gathers above the waistline, and darts on the shoulders. The sleeves fit the arm snugly, and are smartly high and Victorian at the shoulders. In velvet, satin, thin wool or silk crepe, this will be one of the most slenderizing, flattering frocks you ever put on!

Workaday Dress.

An unusually smart casual fashion is this one with the princess skirt cut up to a high waistline and topped by gathers that give fullness over the bosom, accentuating the slimmness of the skirt. Swirls of braid on the pretty sleeves, and a row of braid edging the round collar trim it up just enough. Make this of gingham, calico or percale for home work, and in wool crepe, flannel or flat crepe for runabout.

The Patterns.

No. 1585 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39-inch material. With short sleeves, 4 1/4 yards; 1 1/4 yards trimming.

No. 1629 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35-inch material; 1 1/2 yards braid.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Washing Chamois.—Wash chamois in tepid soapsuds. Use one or two changes of suds until the chamois is perfectly clean. Rinse in tepid water. Squeeze (do not wring) and hang in the sun. Snap it and pull it frequently until it is perfectly dry.

For Soiled Suede Shoes and Belts.—Clean with sawdust or bran, slightly warmed in the oven. Rub it over the surface with a clean, soft rag, and to raise the pile, rub gently afterwards with fine emery paper.

Choosing Poultry.—When you choose poultry see that the beak and claws of a fowl are soft, not stiff and horny. The bones of all young birds are soft.

Stained Tea Cloths.—Cover stains on a tea cloth with glycerin and leave to dry; then boil and rinse in the usual way and all the marks will disappear.

Horse Sense About Winter Oil Change

Cold weather creates new problems in lubrication. To overcome damaging wear, the motor oil must possess three essential characteristics: (1) low cold test to assure quick easy starts (2) ability to lubricate at all driving speeds (3) durability to stand up for reasonable mileage. Curiously enough these requirements are contradictory in that to assure one factor it is very easy to unbalance another.

The only safe rule to follow in preparing your car for Winter is to buy the very best motor oil, Acid-Free Quaker State.

The refiners of Quaker State were pioneers in developing motor oils for Winter use. Today in four great modern refineries the most modern equipment and methods transform the finest Pennsylvania grade crude into motor oils which make automobiles, trucks and tractors run better, last longer, the year 'round.

The low cold test of Quaker State Winter Oil assures smooth easy starts. Its purity frees you of worry about sludge, carbon and corrosion. Its ability to stand up is unequalled . . . you go farther before you need to add a quart.

It is merely commonsense to practice economy. And the accumulated experience of car manufacturers, engineers, and most car owners proves that the use of high quality motor oil is genuine economy. It is conservatively estimated by authorities that 80 to 90 per cent of all repairs to an automobile are caused by faulty or incorrect lubrication.

A wise man once said: "It takes 12 months and sometimes longer to correct a mistake on a farm." Just so, five minutes running with the wrong oil in the engine of your car the first cold morning this Winter can cause more wear and damage than all the miles you drove this past Summer.

Play safe with your motor investment. Ask your dealer to prepare your car for Winter with Acid-Free Quaker State Winter Oil of the proper grade for your car.

Use Left-Over Cereal.—Never throw away leftover cereal. It may be fried and served with syrup.

How to Stretch Soap.—To make your laundry soap last longer, unwrap it as soon as you buy it and pile the cakes loosely in a dry place so they'll dry. Hard soap goes farther than soft.

When Buying Curtains.—In buying curtains it is a good idea to select them longer than the window requires, and put a tuck at the top just above the rod pockets or headings, so that after they are washed they can be let out as much as necessary to bring them back to the correct length.

Cleaning Hair Brushes.—Hair brushes should be washed in hot water to which a nut of soda or a few drops of ammonia have been added. Dip the bristles in and out, but do not allow the water to cover the backs. Rinse in cold water and wipe the backs, but not the bristles.

Causes of Accidents.—Among the causes of accident in the home are loose or broken stair treads, especially attic or cellar stairs. Equally dangerous is a clutter of mops, brooms, carpet sweepers, small boxes and other things on the edge of the stairs. One fall caused by such a simple thing may cause many weeks of suffering and expense.

Watch Young Toes.—It's dangerous, especially for children, to have the feet of stockings too short; it may lead to foot deformities. Stockings should not be too large, either; they may form ridges that will cause painful blisters.

Fishing in inland waters will close on November 30th. According to the laws seasons on all species of fish except bullheads, suckers, redhorse, carp, buffalo, quillback, gar and dogfish closes on that date. Those named may be lawfully taken at any time of the year.

In the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers much commercial fishing as well as angling will stop on November 30th. Northern Pike, catfish, sheepshead, bullheads, carp, buffalo, gar, quillback, dogfish, suckers and redhorse may be taken at any time of the year in these two streams. It is anticipated that commercial fishing and angling for the named species will continue until the rivers freeze over.

Conservation authorities declare the 1938 fishing season the most successful for many years. Constant stocking and improved water conditions are responsible for the good thing, officials stated.

NO MORE FROGS

Iowa has a closed season on frogs. After November 30th and until June 1, 1939, it will be unlawful to take frogs or have them in possession. It is unlawful to ship frogs out of the state at any time.

Sure we're thankful! This Thanksgiving Day we have a lot of things to be thankful for. We're thankful that we are still Republican and didn't get jittery six years ago and jump over the fence! We're thankful that we are living in the best community in North Iowa and we're thankful we live in the best country in the world! Those are only a few things this scribe is thankful for. We could fill a book with the many things we enjoy every day!

I-S-A-S

And we're thankful we are only a fisherman and not a duck and goose hunter. Which brings to mind the story circulating the inner circle about how Quentin Stille almost . . . shot a goose one day, a week or so ago. Quentin was prowling around a duck pond southeast of Klemme one day when he spotted a nice big goose swimming majestically around in the pond. Q. S. inserted some high power ammunition in his trusty old fire-arm and proceeded to "snake crawl," (belly-fashion to you) very cautiously until he "snook" fairly close to the unsuspecting goose. Q. S. raised up and whammed into the old gander. . . then discovered it was only a wooden decoy!

It's going to take Q. S. years to live that one down.

I-S-A-S

Only seven more days of fishing . . . time we were taking the old rod apart and oiling up the reel for many long months before we again take to the lakes and streams. Oh, to be a millionaire and do our fishing in the south this winter! But, who the heck wants to be a millionaire?

I-S-A-S

The Klemme School is making a drive to increase their band enrollment to at least forty members. Mr. Batchelder, director of school music, believes it can be done. . . more power to him. Parents should urge their children to take up band work. Not only do they receive good musical training, but they are also taught cooperation, how to obey orders and working in harmony. It's a grand sight to see a marching band of forty or fifty boys and girls go through their paces with perfect timing and coordination. The band will give your boy or girl a training course obtainable in no other way.

I-S-A-S

And while we are on the subject of school matters, a number of sports fans,—this scribe included,—would like to see our high school athletic department do something about starting six man football for next fall. It would be an ideal sport for the Seven Eagles Conference schools to take up in place of baseball, which is a losing sport, financially.

Six man football is sweeping the country by storm. Plans could be worked out during the winter so that the several schools could get in practice and have teams ready for the fall season.

SEASON ON WATERFOWL TO CLOSE NOVEMBER 28

The open season for ducks, geese, mudhen and jacksnipe closes on November 28th in Iowa. Waterfowl held in possession on the closing date may be held for a period of ten days following the close of the open season, according to Federal regulations. While the state is authorized to issue permits to hold other game longer than ten days, it cannot do so with migratory game because of the specific limitation of ten days placed by Federal law.

December 8th is the last day a person may have migratory game taken in Iowa in his possession.

EVEN MINNOWS GET A REST

The lowly minnow, dear to the heart of many a fisherman, is given a rest under the law. After Nov 30th and until May 15th, 1939, the law provides a rest period for this species.

It is unlawful to seine minnows during that time. Conservation officials explain that minnows must be afforded protection because they are number one on the game fish's diet and are decreasing in number.

Klemme Girl Prominent In Activities At Cornell College

Miss Gladys Zabilka, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Zabilka, has been chosen as a member of the soprano section of the Oratorio Society, a chorus composed of a 150 voices.

Miss Zabilka is a senior this year and is majoring in public school music.

RATS KILL WILDLIFE

Studies of the common house rat, intensively carried on when they became a serious pest in the trenches during the World War, show that rats take to woods and fields during the summer months. They are almost as much at home in the water as a muskrat, and destroy many forms of wildlife. In the autumn, rats seek the habitations of man. Intensive control of rats, around farm dwellings, during the winter months is important in game management.

OFFICIAL CANVASS BY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FAILS TO CHANGE VOTES

Official canvass of Hancock County votes by the Board of Supervisors failed to make any noticeable change in the final results. In the case of Oscar Johnson and Walt Pritchard in the race for State Representative, the final count gave Johnson 2,498 votes and Pritchard
2,443, which gave Johnson a net lead of 55 votes.

Slight errors in the unofficial report, however, had no bearing on the final count.

SALE OF CHRISTMAS SEALS NOW UNDERWAY

The Christmas Seal Sale is now underway. Thousands of men and women opened their mail the past week and found one or more sheets of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals.

For the past 31 years these penny stickers have financed the fight against tuberculosis in the United States.

Some 12,000,000 letters this year carried Christmas Seals to public spirited citizens who have supported this great voluntary health movement for so many years. Others will be sold through personal visits so that every one will have a chance to take part in the nationwide work of fighting tuberculosis.

Drop boxes in Klemme are located in the Lau Implement Store and Thada's Store. Anyone not receiving Seals in the mail may get some at either of these places or from the chairman, Martha Breckenner or Mrs. Thada.

Rural Intersection Scene Of Accident

MRS. ED. SCHOENWETTER SERIOUSLY INJURED IN CAR ACCIDENT SUNDAY

Is At Mason City Hospital; Others Were Not Injured

Mrs. Ed. Schoenwetter, farm wife six miles southwest of Klemme, is in a Mason City hospital for treatment following an accident Sunday in which she was seriously injured.

Mrs. Schoenwetter was injured when the car in which she was riding with her husband and children, Lyle and Velda, and a car driven by Kermit Stille, Liberty township farmer, collided on a country road intersection near the Bill Velau farm at about noon Sunday. Both cars were demolished.

In the accident Mrs. Schoenwetter received a dislocated hip, fracture of the pelvic bone and cuts and bruises. When the car in which she was riding turned over she was thrown out through the back door. Other occupants of the car were but slightly bruised.

The car driven by Kermit Stille, in which he alone was riding was also badly wrecked but he was not injured.

The Schoenwetter family had attended church in Liberty township and were returning to their home and were driving south. Mr. Stille was driving his car west when the accident took place.

Shamrocks Open Conference Cage Season Against Strong Woden Five

KLEMMME SHAMROCKS TO PLAY AT WODEN IN CONFERENCE GAME

The Klemme Shamrocks will open the conference basketball season at Woden, Friday night in a double header that will see the Little Shamrocks step into action at 7:30 p. m. against the Woden reserves.

Woden Has Fast Team

According to the "dope" Woden will have a fast outfit this year as several veterans are on the five. Woden finished in a second place tie with Goodell last year in the Seven Eagles Conference race. Woden was the only conference team to hand the Shamrocks a defeat last year, when they beat the local five by one point on the Woden court.

VAGABONDS BREAK EVEN IN GAMES PLAYED PAST WEEK

Lose To Meservey 23 to 22; Win Over Ventura 34 to 22

The Klemme Vagabonds opened their season Friday night when they journeyed to Meservey and came out on the short end of a 23 to 22 score. Trailing by five points in the closing minutes of play, the local five put on a desperate rally that fell short by two points of overcoming the Meservey lead.

Stokesbury and Barz looked best in the scoring column for the Vagabonds, as they garnered 8 and 7 points, respectively.

Win Over Ventura

Monday night the Ventura Independents invaded the local gym and took on the Vagabonds in a game that saw the score seesaw back and forth until the final quarter, when Klemme, aided by the sharpshooting of Bill Lemke, put on a drive that put them out in front 34 to 22 at the final gun.

Lemke handled most of the scoring for the Vagabonds, as he bucketed 11 goals for 22 points. Keeper hit the hoop for 10 points from his guard position.

Will Play Meservey Here

Next Monday night, December 5th, the Vagabonds will play the Meservey Independents on the local floor. The game should be a honey, as the local five will be seeking revenge for the one-point defeat suffered at Meservey.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Galbreth spent Thanksgiving Day with relatives at Plymouth.

TRAPPING SEASON IN FULL SWING

With colder weather in the State also comes reports of "heavy" trapping throughout Iowa. It has been reported that the fur is prime and of unusual quality this year. The sudden activity in trapping coming with the colder weather indicates that trappers prefer to wait until the fur is prime before trapping to realize a greater return for their efforts.

A sharp increase in sales of trapping licenses and fur buyers' permits have been noted. Additional supplies of blanks had to be printed to take care of the demand, reports the State Conservation Commission.

He said for the kiddies here to watch the Klemme Times for the exact time he will be at Mr. Thada's Store. He will have a treat for all the kiddies. Mr. Thada will let his whiskers grow from now until December 17th and he will play Santa to the grown-ups by serving lunch and coffee that day.

CHRIS JACOBS DIED SUD-DENLY AT ESTHERVILLE LAST TUESDAY EVENING

Had Served As Hancock County Auditor For Four Terms

Chris Jacobs, long time Garner resident, former Hancock County Auditor and widely known throughout North Iowa, died suddenly last Tuesday evening at Estherville, when he suffered a severe heart attack.

Mr. Jacobs moved with his family to Garner over twenty-five years ago and in 1918 he was elected County Auditor, and served in that capacity for a total of eight years. He served first from 1919 to 1923 and from 1928 to 1932.

Since retiring from public life, Mr. Jacobs had been doing work in North Iowa, checking and collecting taxes for various counties. He was in Estherville on business when he was stricken.

When Ed. Jacobs, his son, first came to Klemme, about twenty years ago, Mr. Jacobs was interested in the hardware business here and the firm was then known as Jacobs & Son. Ed. took over the entire business a number of years ago.

Funeral Services Held Friday

Funeral services were held at the Garner Methodist Church on Friday afternoon, November 25, with Rev. V. V. Schuldt giving the sermon. Burial was made in the Garner Cemetery.

In his sermon, Rev. Schuldt read the following obituary:

After several years of work, getting himself established, he married Miss Ann Rohlf, April 25, 1905, and they lived and farmed in Jackson County for 18 years.

Two children were born to them, Edmund and Ethel. The family came to Garner in 1914, where for several years Mr. Jacobs served as County Auditor. During the past eight years he has served as tax examiner.

Latest Nazi Anti-Jewish Drive Gives Restless Reich a 'Cause'

By Joseph W. La Bine

Religion

In times of stress men are known to seek solace in religion. But even religion's solace becomes difficult when men are persecuted for their faith and race. That is the plight now facing all German opponents of Nazidom's socialistic ideology, which dictates that the state must come first, that religion must take what is left. Thus, in less than a week's time, German Jews were persecuted unmercifully and driven back to medieval ghetto style of living, while German Catholics also found themselves on the defensive. Though the Vatican has long been outspoken against Germany's five-year persecution of Jews, outright hostility did not come until last month's Nazi storming of Theodore

CARDINAL VON FAULHABER
Terrorism arrived from Vienna.

Cardinal Innitzer's palace in Vienna. Now this battle has spread to Munich, where Michael Cardinal von Faulhaber's palace was stoned. At Salzburg the Catholic university society has disbanded.

The immediate excuse for a 36-hour anti-Jewish hysteria was the assassination in Paris of Ernest von Rath, a German diplomatic attaché, by a 17-year-old Polish Jew. Righteously proclaiming that German Jews are answerable for the anti-Nazi acts of world Jewry, Germany has resorted to medieval terrorism and forced her Jewish citizens into such an economically impossible situation that self-extinction appears to be the eventual result.

This seemingly ill-reasoned solution of the Jewish problem apparently typifies the Nazi method of dealing with enemies, real or imaginary. Observers are certainly not inclined to accept the Von Rath murder as a reason for the latest wave of persecution. Probably a better answer is that totalitarian rulers must have a constant "cause celebre" and that Nazidom, having won its Czechoslovakian cause, has found a new wave of Jewish persecution the most satisfactory method of keeping national enthusiasm whipped up. However, since world opinion has rebelled against such a gruesome policy, it may prove a boomerang.

Foreign

To ward off Germany's aggression on southeastern Europe, Turkey's late President Kemal Ataturk led formation of a Balkan entente. Its members: Greece, Turkey, Rumania and Yugoslavia. In the center lies independent Bulgaria, still sulking over World War territorial losses to Greece, Yugoslavia and Rumania, waiting for the highest bidder to buy her favor.

Since dynamic President Ataturk died, since Germany's economic drive has borne fruit this year in Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, the Balkan entente is now looking for every possible means of solidifying itself. Observers predict that Yugoslavia will return her war-torn territory to Bulgaria before January 1, also that Greece and Rumania will do likewise. In return, Bulgaria will join the Balkan entente.

Meanwhile, although the entente will be strengthened by this shift of frontiers, Turkey's anti-Nazi position is not nearly so strong under her new president, Ismet Inönü, as under Ataturk. Although Turkey has long been pro-British, England's vacillating policy of recent months has forced the Turks to seek other alliances. While an admirer of the United States and Great Britain, Inönü cannot forget the obligations his nation assumed when it recently received a huge loan from the Reich. Thus he must co-operate with southeastward-bound Adolf Hitler.

Desperately seeking to avert national bankruptcy, France has issued 32 decree laws imposing every restriction possible without violating the traditional principles of French government. The gold reserve has been revaluated at the rate of 170 francs to the pound sterling, giving the government a paper profit of 22 billion francs. All taxes have been raised and the controversial five-day work week has been modified without discarding its principle. Forced to make sacrifices usually imposed only during a war, Frenchmen have only one alternative—financial and economic collapse. Although the success of France's rehabilitation effort rests solely on co-operation, Premier Edouard Daladier has one strong right arm in the support of 7,000,000 World War veterans.

Domestic

After 23 years of bickering, the U. S. and Mexico have reached a settlement over Mexican expropriation of American-owned farm lands. On December 1 a two-man committee will meet in Mexico City to determine the amount of Mexico's liability, after which a $1,000,000 initial payment will be made. Subsequent payments will not be less than $1,000,000 a year. Mexico insists, however, that the farm land settlement establishes no precedent requiring her to pay for $400,000,000 in foreign-owned oil lands seized during the past few years. Why she should pay for land which contains no oil, meanwhile refusing to pay for land that does, is a perplexing bit of reasoning. The most likely answer is that farm land is cheaper than oil land, and that Mexico hopes her larger sin will be forgiven if she atones for the smaller sin.

Agriculture

The U. S. department of agriculture's efforts to export surplus wheat have never enjoyed the state department's sympathy, since foreign wheat-growing nations would be angry if their domestic prices were depressed by U. S. dumping of surplus grain. Although Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace now admits the export subsidy plan is not efficient, his department is committed to disposing of part of the U. S. surplus in this manner. Meanwhile Secretary of State Cordell Hull has held his breath, hoping these exports will not injure international relations, especially with South American nations.

This was the situation when Frank A. Theis, Kansas City grain broker, appeared at Rio de Janeiro to sell 15,000,000 bushels of U. S. wheat in Brazil. That nation was not immediately hostile but a strong protest came from Argentina, which now supplies all of Brazil's wheat. Although Brazilians could use cheap wheat to make cheap bread, Argentina is a good customer of the U. S.

Upshot was a protest to the state department, delivered in Washington by Argentina's Ambassador Don Felipe Espel. The problem's crux:

ARGENTINA'S FELIPE ESPEL
What provoked a crisis.

If Argentina could prove the agriculture department was assisting Mr. Theis in selling his wheat to Brazil, Buenos Aires would consider it equivalent to an "international incident." Mr. Hull issued an immediate denial of official U. S. implication in the scheme.

So did Mr. Wallace, but he could not refrain from worrying publicly about the U. S. agricultural problem. Since future "international incidents" will almost inevitably result if the U. S. tries to sell any more wheat abroad, Mr. Wallace must now concentrate on solving the problem domestically. The recent elections rebuffed his 1938 farm bill but he promises to defend it before the next congress. He has even invited newly-elected congressmen to offer their suggestions. Meanwhile, little more is heard of the two-price plan for domestic dumping, under which low-income families would buy surplus commodities at special rates.

People

Great Britain is badly in need of salesmen to keep her far-flung empire intact, and no better salesman could be found than the duke of Windsor. Now exiled in Paris with his wife, the former Wallis Warfield, England's abdicated king may soon return to England's good graces. That conciliatory gestures are in the air has been shown by the visit to Paris of the duke and duchess of Gloucester, Windsor's brother. It is considered likely that Edward and his wife will spend Christmas day in London, probably returning later to take up permanent residence at Fort Belvidere.

Politics

Like all natural phenomena and many not so natural, U. S. political fortunes run in cycles of liberalism and conservatism. Thus every lengthy Republican administration has been succeeded by a shorter Democratic one, attesting to the American people's inherent conservatism. Since the Republican party reached its latest low ebb under Candidate Alfred Landon in 1936, none but the most optimistic expected anything but a minor gain so early as 1938. But it has proved otherwise, thanks to (1) a growing belief that the Roosevelt administration's expensive recovery efforts have been unsuccessful, and (2) a fear that New Deal policies were encouraging the growth of radicalism.

Moreover, it has been apparent that the public must eventually protest against the political corruption which unavoidably gathers around so large a financial project as WPA. Though the Roosevelt administration may be blameless in this respect, such political machines as that of Pennsylvania's Gov. George H. Earle have unsavory reputations.

Another consideration, one that received less attention than eventually proved justified, was dissatisfaction among America's numerically important farmers. Since the agricultural vote can control congress, it looked bad for the administration when this year's highly touted farm program failed. Despite Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace's sincere efforts, New Deal farm legislation has left producers in northern states without permanent relief. (See Agriculture.)

Almost without exception the November general election has therefore made the U. S. return to its most normal political alignment in approximately 15 years. Always Democratic, the "solid South" has clung tenaciously to tradition. But this tradition does not mean the South will line up 100 per cent behind President Roosevelt, for South Carolina, Georgia and Maryland elected senators partially unsympathetic with the New Deal. Several other southern senators and congressmen, not up for re-election this year, are also unsympathetic.

Though in many cases the Republican trend is not so great as first appearances might indicate, practically all northern states have shown a surge back to conservatism. This was especially marked in Minnesota and Wisconsin, where Farmer-Labor and Progressive partisans were ousted after long incumbencies. Michigan swung away from Democratic Gov. Frank Murphy largely because he sympathized with the radically tinged Committee for Industrial Organization. In all northwestern states the swing to Republicanism was due partly to agricultural dissatisfaction. New England's industrial population rebelled against allegedly oppressive taxation and the C. I. O., while this territory's traditional conservatism also played an important role. Substantially the same explanation can be made for votes in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

The only important New Deal gains have come in California, where a rock-ribbed Republican governor was ousted; in North Dakota, whose notoriously unsettled political situation has freakishly placed a Democrat in the governor's chair, and in Maryland.

But such a resume does not tell the entire story, for even those states which remained Democratic have shown an amazingly strong Republican upsurge. New York's Gov. Herbert H. Lehman won by only 70,000 votes over his Republican opponent, youthful Thomas E. Dewey, whereas two years ago Mr. Lehman had a 500,000 margin. Illinois, which remains predominantly New Deal, increased its Republican house representation and returned a much larger conservative vote than in 1936.

Having gained at least 8 senators, 81 house members and 11 governors, the Republican party once more has a vocal minority in congress. Moreover its 1940 presidential hopes are better, despite the defeat in New York of Tom Dewey, once considered a likely candidate. If the 1938 election has created any new presidential possibilities, they are Ohio's Republican Sen. Robert Taft and Missouri's Democratic Sen. Bennett Champ Clark.

What the Republican upsurge will do for the U. S. remains conjectural, but post-election stock market activity has been encouraging. To help industry, the American Federation of Labor is already banking on G. O. P. congressional aid in amending the Wagner labor relations act. The outstanding fact is that 1938's Republican party has emerged a liberalized entity, well-spanked for its former ultra-conservatism.

Defense

When Financier Bernard Baruch first proposed a huge United States rearmament program after the European war scare, one of his talking points was that private enterprise would be revitalized. Official Washington agrees, as shown by rumors that the 1917 war industries board may be re-established to co-ordinate a "rearmament spending program" by private industry. The government expects $5,000,000,000 to be spent for rehabilitation and expansion of railroads, public utilities, chemicals, automotive and aircraft industries. It also expects "mobilization" of America's raw materials, solving such problems as that of manganese, an essential element in steel production which now comes largely from Cuba because United States deposits are not developed.

Star Dust

★ Glamorous, the Order
★ Opera Cycle in Movies
★ Radio's Grand Old Man

—By Virginia Vale—

ANDREA LEEDS has given her studio press agents no end of trouble. They've tried to make her a glamour girl, and she doesn't want to be one.

"I'd rather get married," says she. "It lasts longer."

But orders were that she must be glamorous—and that she must take on some weight in order to do it in "The Last Frontier," in which she captivates Gary Cooper.

She gave in, and then stumbled while playing badminton and broke a bone in her right foot. That meant being in bed with her foot in a plaster cast for three weeks, she was told. But she went night clubbing, plaster cast and all—if a girl's going to be glamorous she has to be seen about town. And her earnest effort to acquire the reputation the studio had ordered got her nothing but a scolding.

Now we're to have an opera cycle in pictures. The San Francisco Grand Opera company has been selling out at all performances, so the motion picture companies got an inspiration and leaped right in. Metro starts the ball rolling with "Madame Pompadour," with a European importation, Meliza Korjus, starred. Two other studios will follow suit.

Probably the best one of the lot will be Walt Disney's "Farmyard Symphony," which will be knee-deep in burlesques of operatic arias; it's being released practically at once.

Tom Brown's supposed to break his neck in "The Duke of West Point," and had to wear one of those braces around his neck for eight hours. (Eric von Stroheim wears one in "Grand Illusion," a foreign picture that goes down as one of the best of the year.) Afterward Brown's neck was so stiff that he thought he'd never be able to move it naturally again.

William Powell is going back to work in January, under a new contract recently signed with Metro. His first picture will be "The Return of the Thin Man," with Myrna Loy, of course. That "Thin Man" series threatens to become as lengthy as the Charlie Chan one.

If anyone were to offer a medal for "The Grand Old Man of Radio" Rudy Vallee would probably get it. Not that he's old, but he's done so much to develop good programs and has discovered so much talent that he deserves the title.

If you heard his tenth anniversary program you've already checked up on that. If you didn't, you can probably remember that the list of people he's developed as stars of the air includes a lot of famous folk, from Alice Faye to Charlie McCarthy.

But you may not have known that he is responsible for the modern type of guest program. Irene Bordoni was his first guest star. In 1922 his program developed into its present form. The salary list was low, and still is far below the sums paid for some similar programs which are outdistanced by his in the popularity ratings.

It takes the listeners-in to make Tommy Riggs appreciate his talents. First they made him what he is today with his "Betty Lou" voice, and now they've been writing to him to praise his very pleasant baritone voice and urge him to do more singing as himself on his program.

ODDS AND ENDS. . . Jimmy Walker, ex-mayor of New York, certainly started something when he began those weekly broadcasts from the city's hospitals; his many friends in the entertainment field clamor to work for him for nothing, he gives his own services, and the programs are swell. . . If you like pictures about doctors you certainly must see "The Citadel," which is one of the best. . . And be sure to see "The Young in Heart". . . All the studios are making Westerns these days. . . James Cagney's contribution to the cycle is "Oklahoma Kid," and he's had to learn to shoot like a cowboy instead of a gangster.

Healthy Mind Will Preserve Facial Beauty

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

A HEALTHY, clear thinking, energetic mind is not only the nucleus of beauty but it is the nucleus of a radiant happy life!

Had I space to quote famous authorities I could convince you that destructive thoughts, or an undisciplined mind, can rob a woman of her health and destroy her happiness.

As you think, your face and eyes express your thoughts. Catch a glimpse of yourself in a mirror as you converse with a friend. Notice how your eyes sparkle and your lips turn upward when you speak gaily. See how quickly a frown appears and your eyes dim when you talk of sorrow or feel sad. Your lips narrow and your eyes partly close when you give vent to anger or gossip maliciously. Would you have believed it?

Do you know that every unworthy thought registers on your face? Haven't you seen women whose countenances reveal their habitual thoughts of malice, selfishness, jealousy? Of course you have. Over-indulgence of miserable traits have robbed them of their beauty and happiness.

Don't Be A Neurotic

Sick minds, registered on faces, ward off all human sympathy and love.

So don't be a neurotic. Keep your mind active, free, and in order. It is the receiving and sending instrument of your entire body. Let it receive wholesome, pleasant messages. Let it send wholesome, pleasant dictations. You know the old adage that "Beauty comes from within"—well it does, from within your mind!

Your face reflects your thoughts

If you have been in the habit of brooding, of becoming easily hurt at people's thoughtless words or actions, strive to overcome those tendencies. Ignore hurts and discouragements. Realize that brooding—or worrying—is an insidious form of illness which can destroy a lot of you hold dear.

Don't be a woman consumed with self-pity. Don't be a girl consumed with self-pity. Every person has a tough time in life. Every person has problems and hurdles to leap. No life is without sorrow nor is any life without joy! Take life as it comes. Keep yourself healthy and let your mind create beauty!

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

The intelligent way to go about changing the style of your hairdress is to sit before your mirror after you have given your hair a thorough brushing away from the scalp. Comb your hair back from the face. Determine which hair-do will accent your good features and soften your less glamorous ones.

If you can afford it, go to an expert stylist and let him take you in hand. Otherwise go to a good barber and get a hair cut once you have decided on the exciting new style. Try to suit your type, your mood, your clothes. Try all sorts of parts until you find one that does a lot for you.

Area of Dominion of Canada The area of the Dominion of Canada is greater than that of continental United States. The area of United States proper is 3,026,790 square miles, while that of the Dominion of Canada is 3,729,665 square miles. United States proper and Alaska have an area of 3,617,675 square miles. Thus it will be seen that the Dominion of Canada has a greater area than the combined areas of the United States proper and Alaska.

Fear of Ghosts The belief that a widow who remarries will be haunted by the spirit of her late husband is widespread in both primitive and civilized countries, says a writer in Collier's Weekly. As late as 1912 a man in Macon Ga., was quickly granted a divorce when he explained that the ghost of his wife's first husband bothered them so much they could no longer live together.

Cross-Stitch Design For Knitted Things

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THERE is an amusing story about the mittens and scarf shown here. They were not hand knitted. They were purchased rather hurriedly and sent to a young miss who was away at school. She had wanted something rather gay and a bit foreign looking to wear for skating and these were perfectly plain and pretty drab. She didn't take her disappointment lying down, but decided to brighten up that scarf and mitten set and make it speak a foreign language as well! She found the Swedish cross-stitch design shown here and copied it in all its gay colors on the ends of the scarf and backs of the mittens.

Hand knitted mittens and other knitted things in plain colors may also be decorated with this pert flower pattern. Start at the upper right corner of the large flower and make the cross stitches as at A and B. This flower is a brilliant red, the small flowers bright blue and the stems jade green.

Next Year Will Be Celebrated The Centennial of Photography

And in His Recently-Published Book, "Photography and the American Scene," Dr. Robert Taft Has Not Only Given an Authoritative Account of the First 50 Years of Picture-Taking but Has Made an Important Contribution to the Social History of the United States.

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN JANUARY, 1939, will be celebrated the 100th birthday of "the greatest boon ever conferred upon the common man in recent years." That benefaction, according to John Richard Green, the historian who made this statement, was photography.

Throughout photography's centennial year of 1939 we Americans, who are probably the most "picture-minded" people in the world, will be asking such questions as "Who was the inventor of photography—how was it started—who were the pioneers in the field—who did most to bring it to its present high stage of development?" Fortunately for us the answers to those questions, and many others, are to be found in a recently published book, which is one of the most important contributions to the social history of the United States that has appeared in recent years. It is "Photography and the American Scene—A Social History, 1839-1889," written by Robert Taft and published by the Macmillan company.

Six years ago Dr. Taft, who as professor of chemistry at the University of Kansas has always been interested in the history of photography from a purely technical standpoint, was reading an account of the explorations of Gen. John C. Fremont, the so-called "Pathfinder of the West." A question arose in his mind as to the first use of photography in the exploration of the West and when he sought enlightenment on this point he found a curious dearth of information about it. He then began to accumulate data on the subject. Out of that grew his history of American photography—a monumental volume of 546 pages illustrated with more than 300 pictures, a book as distinguished for its lively and readable style as for the scholarlyness of the research back of it.

Importance of Photography.

In the introduction Dr. Taft declares that Green, the historian, "can not be far wrong" in his estimate of the importance of photography to the common man. He says: "Photography affects the lives of modern individuals so extensively that it is difficult to enumerate all of its uses. In addition to preserving for us the portraits of loved ones, it illustrates our newspapers, our magazines, our books. It enables the physician to record the inner structure of man and thus aids in alleviating man's ills. By its means, man has been able to study the infinitely small, to explore the outer reaches of space, to discover planets, and to reveal the structure of atoms. Crime has been detected through its agency as readily as have flaws in metal structures. It has recorded the past, educated our youth and last, but not least, it has given us the most popular form of amusement ever devised."

Louis Jacques Mande Daguerre, the Frenchman, little realized how all of those benefits would come from the process, the discovery of which he announced in January, 1839, and which was to immortalize his name in the word "daguerreotype." He was a painter of the diorama, a succession of scenes painted on a canvas which was caused to pass slowly before the eyes of the observer. Seeking a way to reproduce scenes upon the canvas without the labor of painting them, Daguerre began a series of experiments to find such a method. Then he learned that another Frenchman, Joseph Nicéphore Niepce, was engaged in a similar quest. The two men decided to join forces and in 1829 formed a partnership which was to continue for 10 years. Niepce died in 1833 but Daguerre continued his experiments which eventually enabled him to "reproduce the most minute details of a scene with an exactitude and sharpness well-nigh incredible."

That was the characterization of his process by Arago, secretary of the French Academy of Sciences and the most influential French scientist of the time, who was instrumental in securing from his government an annuity of 8,000 francs (later increased to 10,000) for Daguerre and one of 4,000 for Niepce's heirs. In return for this Daguerre was to describe his process publicly and make it available to anyone who might wish to use it.

Daguerre did not describe his process publicly until August 19, 1839, but already word of the new marvel had been spread through the popular and scientific press of France and England, and the news reached America as early as March, 1839. The editor of the Knickerbocker, a New York magazine, declared that the daguerreotype's "exquisite perfection almost transcends the bounds of sober belief."

Enters S. F. B. Morse.

One of the accounts in an American newspaper (the New York Observer for April 20, 1839) was written by a man who was to play an important part in the development of photography in this country. He was Samuel Finley Breese Morse, destined for future fame as the inventor of the telegraph. Morse, who had already achieved fame as a portrait painter, had gone abroad in the summer of 1838 to secure patents in England and France for his "electro-magnetic telegraph" on which he had been working for several years. After securing a French patent, he remained in Paris for several months while negotiating with the Russian government for a contract for his invention and during this time Daguerre made his historic announcement.

Morse, who as a portrait painter had experimented, unsuccessfully, with the same idea, was immediately interested in the Frenchman's discovery, and sought an interview with the suggestion that if Daguerre would show him his daguerreotypes, Morse would demonstrate his telegraph. Daguerre consented and from this interview grew the story that the Frenchman "generously imparted the secret of the new art to the American by whom it was carried across the ocean and successfully introduced into the United States."

After examining all of available evidence in regard to the claims made in behalf of Morse and others for the title of "the first person to make a successful daguerreotype in the United States," Dr. Taft awards the distinction to D. W. Seager, an Englishman living in New York in 1839. On September 27, Seager made a picture which showed a part of St. Paul's church, the surrounding shrubbery and houses, and a corner of the Astor house.

The First Portrait.

The author of "Photography and the American Scene" also examines the evidence in an attempt to answer the question "Who made the first photographic portrait?" That honor has also been claimed for Morse and for Professor John W. Draper who made the famous portrait of his sister, Miss Dorothy Catherine Draper, which has often been reproduced as "the first photographic portrait." But according to Dr. Taft, it was not. That honor goes to Alexander S. Wolcott of New York, an instrument maker and manufacturer of dental supplies who became interested in daguerreotype when his partner, John Johnson, secured a copy of Daguerre's directions for making pictures by his new process. On October 7, 1839, Wolcott made a successful profile portrait of Johnson and this Taft calls the "first."

But more important than establishing these "historic firsts" is the complete story of the development of the various photographic processes which Dr. Taft's book gives—"not primarily from a technical viewpoint, but from that of social history," as he explains. "I have endeavored to trace, however imperfectly, the effects of photography upon the social history of America and in turn the effect of social life upon the progress of photography."

So in this book we read how Yankee ingenuity soon made the American daguerreotypes superior to those made in any other country and how this first phase of photography reached its zenith in the work of Mathew B. Brady to whose studio came all of the great and near-great, as well as distinguished foreign visitors, to have their portraits made. Brady's greatest fame, of course, rests upon the work he did in making a pictorial history of the Civil war. Dr. Taft, while giving full credit to him as a photographic historian, also rescues from oblivion the names of many of the operators in his employ who made the photographs credited to Brady, as well as other Civil war photographers. Notable among these were Alexander Gardner and T. H. O'Sullivan, who in the early morning of July 4, 1863, made the picture of the Battlefield at Gettysburg which was to become famous under the title of "The Harvest of Death."

After the era of the daguerreotype came the era of the ambrotype, the tintype, the carte de visite, which Oliver Wendell Holmes once called "the social currency, the sentimental 'greenbacks' of civilization" and the stereoscope, which in its day was found in the parlor of virtually every American home. Then came the day of the cabinet photograph and finally the new era began with the introduction of the sensitive dry plate and the flexible film. All of this, appropriately illustrated, is told in Dr. Taft's book, which in its 500-odd pages recreates more vividly than has ever before been done the story of American life during the five most picturesque and most interesting decades of its entire history.

In so far as Dr. Taft's book is the direct result of his curiosity as to the first use of photography in the exploration of the West, it is especially fitting that two of the finest chapters in it deal with "Photographing the Frontier." The first instance of the use of a camera on a government expedition was when the distinguished artist, John Mix Stanley, accompanied the party which in 1853 began surveying the northern railroad route to the Pacific under the command of Gov. I. I. Stevens of Washington Territory.

When Fremont set out upon his expedition in the same year he persuaded S. N. Carvalho of Baltimore, an artist and daguerrotypist, to accompany him. Carvalho wrote a lengthy account of his experiences and one sentence from it is significant of the handicaps under which these pioneer photographers of the frontier worked—"To make a daguerreotype view generally occupied from one to two hours; the principal part of that time was spent in packing and reloading the animals."

Although the Civil war halted government exploring expeditions and therefore expeditionary photography, both were resumed after the war and from that time on the photographer was an important member of the personnel of any exploring party.

Outstanding among these photographers were T. H. O'Sullivan, already well known for his work during the Civil war, and John K. Hillers, who accompanied Maj. J. W. Powell on his historic trip down the Colorado river through the Grand Canyon of Arizona. But the best known of all Western photographers was a man who is still living in New York—95 years young and still keenly interested in photography!

William H. Jackson is his name. A native of New York, he went west after the Civil war. He opened a studio in the growing frontier town of Omaha in 1868, but becoming dissatisfied with the sedentary life of a village photographer, fitted up a traveling dark room on a buckboard and toured the country around Omaha photographing Indians.

In 1869 he took a trip along the newly completed Union Pacific railroad and this brought him into contact with Professor F. V. Hayden who was engaged in making one of the United States geological surveys of the West. From that time until 1879

W. H. Jackson and his working outfit along the line of the Union Pacific railroad in 1869.

Jackson was the official photographer of the Hayden surveys and in that role did some of his most important photography.

He took thousands of pictures of Indians which are interesting historically because they are among the relatively few that were made of the red man before he was forced to live on a reservation and his picturesque native life was greatly modified by contact with the whites.

But even more important work was done by Jackson in another field. The Hayden survey of 1871 was in the region now known as Yellowstone National park. "In fact, the park probably owes its present status to the Hayden survey of this year," declares the author of "Photography and the American Scene" and to Jackson belongs the distinction of taking the first photographs in the region of scenic wonders that has become such a "picture-taker's paradise." The next year he took the first photographs in what is now the Grand Teton National park and in 1874 he and Ernest Ingersoll of the New York Tribune discovered and photographed the ruins of the cliff dwellings in what is now Mesa Verde National park.

W. H. Jackson as he is today.

A Trade Mark Is an Honor Badge and Newspaper Advertising the Sentinel

Substitutes today are the illegitimate children of business. They are fatherless and unknown and they come to the consumer with a "Just as good" label on them which indicates clearly to the thinking buyer that she is buying something which is only "Just as good." The unknown product, the substitute parasite, has no reputation at stake. It is merely advertised for sale on a price basis and if the consumer does not like the quality, the manufacturer has suffered no injury because he is unknown and because he rarely links his name with a product as a standard of quality and a measuring stick of buying. It merely competes on a "take a chance" basis.

The manufacturers of well-known quality merchandise today place their names upon it and advertise it as the best they can offer to the consumer. The name of a manufacturer on an advertised product says this: This is the best product I know how to make. It is pure, good and worthy of your purchase. I think so well of it that I place my name upon it as a guarantee to you of its goodness. If it does not fulfill your wants I will gladly make good its failure.

There is no good reason why you should accept the unknown instead of the known; the unfired instead of the tested; the doubtful instead of the sure. To refuse unknown substitutes is a guarantee to yourself of positive satisfaction in buying. If every purchaser will confine his or her purchases to known, advertised quality merchandise there will be little cause for complaint. Trade mark products tell their own story. It pays to look before you buy. Reading the advertisements in the newspaper, looking at trade marks, labels and names on products has pure interest.

low down politics this writer calls
it. Miller's action is causing a lot of criticism from Republicans all and the legislature should do something it to keep men like Miller from wrecking one of the finest systems in operation in the United States today.

The weather following the freeze put the corn in condition for safe cribbing and husking now is proceeding rapidly.

Pastures and winter wheat have made good growth, except in the dried southern and western counties. There are some reports of intended acreage of winter wheat not being seeded because of chinch bug infestation, Reed reported.

BOX-ELDER BUGS ANNOY BUT ARE NOT HARMFUL

Box-elder bugs found buzzing around in most every house this time of year, are annoying but not destructive pests, says H. M. Harris of the Entomology Department of Iowa State College at Ames.

The box-elder bug does no damage to furniture, emits no odor, eats nothing in the house, carries no disease and does not stain curtains, Harris replies to question asked him this time of year.

By putting on storm windows early in the fall or by keeping the south windows closed the red bugs can best be kept out. However if they do get in the house the only way to get rid of them is to kill them one-by-one with a fly swatter.

SPORTSMANSHIP

Who doesn't admit a good sport? I would say very few, if any. Good sportsmanship is a world wide but perhaps more emphasis is given it here in the United States because we are interested in athletics and sports. Now let's summarize the sports situation down to our own community and school.

The basketball season will soon be in full swing so it would hardly be proper to leave basketball out of the picture.

To have a winning team we must have good sportsmanship. No team ever gained much by foul play but many a game has been won by fair throws.

We want a team that not only the school but the whole town of Klemme can be proud of. It takes a fine bunch of "sports" to be themselves after they have lost a hard fought game. It is good advertising for the school and will induce other schools to think of us as we want them to.

If a player of the opposing team happens to give you a jab in the ribs don't turn around and knock him down not only because he might get up and change places with you but that it would immediately brand you as a very poor sport. It might also prove quite embarrassing to be sent off the floor as the spectators gazed disapprovingly at you until you had withdrawn from the lists.

Basketball fans who like to see good and fair play are many so let's play the game the way it should be played and that way is the right way the way a truly good sport would play it.

HOBBOES VISIT TOWN

If you see King David Hair breadth Harry Scorpshovel Scott or any of the Hobbo pals wandering around the street Wednesday night you needn't be alarmed. They will be on their way to the Junior Class party which is to be held in the gymnasium. All of the high school students and teachers are invited. Some of the hoboes are going to put on an Amateur Hour. King David and his Queen will be crowned during the Amateur Hour. Everyone invited must come dressed as a hobo. If anyone fails to do this he will have to pay a forfeit. Many hobo games have been planned. Hoboes seeking handouts will have to be satisfied with mulligatawny and crackers.

by "Cyclone"

The K H S basketball team is getting into shape for one of its toughest games December 2 with Wenden. The Klemme boys are doing very good in their practices. We are glad to see that our "Flash" of last year's team is back, and as good as he ever was or better. There are so many out for practice that it looks a little over-populated. This year we have ten players—one just about as good as the other. I hope that all of you can come and see good old K H S play Wenden. So with 15 rahs for old K H S we'll see you next week.

This is the first week our bits of memo scraped up from nowhere will be published in the Shamrock Times.

These "Bits of Humor" published by "Lee" Wicks and "Shorty" Barz will appear in a column of the Shamrock Times every week. We urge everyone to not think seriously of what they read. After all, every paper established must have the right amount of humor in order to attract readers.

NEWS STAFF ELECTED

Last week the students in high school elected an editor and an assistant editor for the school paper. LaRayne Stille was elected editor and Doris Johnson the assistant editor. They met with Miss Brakel and chose reporters whom they thought were capable and interested in the following activities: music, drama, sports and nonsense. The class secretaries are the reporters for their classes. They were all as busy as bees during the year.

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

Several girls tried out for the sixth last Tuesday. As yet no one has been definitely chosen.

The Sophomore English class has been studying about parts of expositions the past week. Jackie Kido gave a talk on the life, people, customs and costumes of the country of Czechoslovakia.

A letter came from Des Moines saying that the scoreboard will be here within a few days. This scoreboard is the one received through the Curtiss Publishing Company. It will be installed in the school house soon after it arrives.

We think everyone should use one of the new basketball pencils.

Home Economics Girls Serve Tea

The Freshman and Senior Home Economics classes served a tea to their mothers and friends last Wednesday afternoon from 3:00 until 5:00. They had the time divided into 15 minute periods which made it possible for every girl to serve as hostess, waitress, and pour the tea and coffee.

They served the following menu: tea and coffee, nut bread, checkerboard and ribbon sandwiches, decorated tea cakes, decorated sugar cookies and wafers, mints.

They carried out an orange and brown color scheme and used turkeys and other Thanksgiving decorations.

One day we made up some Thanksgiving stories and poems. We are going to keep them in a book.

The second graders have been reading many stories to us. They are nearly through marking the November Story Chart.

The first graders have been reading from three books this week "Dick and Jane," "Tom and Jim" and "Rides and Slides." They read to the second graders on Wednesday.

The second graders had a vocabulary test on Monday. Marjorie had the highest score. She missed only 1. The other scores are: Iris 2, Daryl 4, Mary 5, and Isabelle 11.

GRADES 3 & 4

Phyllis Christiance and Roger Ridder have perfect spelling scores for this week.

The following people in the 3rd grade have not been absent or tardy this six weeks: Norman Albee, Edward Grosshuesch, Phyllis Kirkwood, Ardel Rosendahl, Helen Suckow and Velma Tiggeman.

The following people in the 4th grade have not been absent or tardy this six weeks: Roger Bock, Elizabeth Goll, Dean Jacobs, Clarence Larsen, Roger Ridder, Harold Schwartz, Ruth Smith and Esther Tiggeman.

Herbert Schwartz and Ronald Brinkman—reporters

Junior's side won our health contest. Each member of the losing side is bringing two pennies. They will buy a treat for the winners. We have chosen new sides. The leaders are Patricia and Ruth.

We have been having tests this week. Mavis, Herbert S. and Patricia are the only ones who got perfect scores in our spelling tests. Patricia has had perfect scores on Friday all six weeks.

This has been a short week because of Thanksgiving vacation on Thursday and Friday.

GRADES 7 & 8

Eighth Grade English class, reporter Eunice Larsen is our new librarian. She will serve for a period of two weeks.

We are starting to paste the pictures on our Iowa map. We have a new Iowa History reference book which was a Federal Writer's Project.

The eighth grade took a self-testing drill Tuesday. We had a score of ten which is excellent.

We have been taking six weeks tests this last week. Eunice Larsen had one hundred per cent in her spelling six weeks test. Freda received one hundred per cent in her arithmetic six weeks test.

Julia Bell, Lawrence Bock, Barbara Johnson, Eunice Larsen, Corrine Merkel, Larry Van Syoc, Betty Etchen, Billy Grosshuesch, Elwyn Jacobs, Robert Jahnke, Dean Merkel and Caroline Schwartz have been neither absent or tardy during the past six weeks.

Frozen Cream Can't Be Made Into Butter Of First Class

Freezing, which "breaks down" cream so that first class butter cannot be made from it, can be prevented by insulating the cooling tank with about a foot of chaff or sawdust, suggests A. W. Rudnick, Iowa State College extension dairy manufacturing specialist.

Frozen cream, he points out, produces greasy, "cornmeal" butter and always brings a lower price.

"Whenever cream is accidentally frozen before being marketed, the best thing to do is to leave it frozen and have the cream buyer thaw it out. If the cream is to be made into butter for home use, it may be thawed out in a tank of water not warmer than 50 degrees F.

"If the cream can be placed in water that's too warm, the fats and other milk solids will separate."

Uncle Phil Says:

Keep Their Sorrows

Many of the world's greatest are unknown to fame. They great because they share their with others.
Conservatism is marked by liberalism, which is a recommendation in itself.

of His Shape

We generally find the all-round man is entirely square.
To push or to be pulled—that is the question every traveler on life's highway ought to ask himself.

As a great part of people's trousers are imaginary, you can help them greatly if you are a good conservator.

That Enough?

A cross man, like a cross baby, is not well. That's about all that can be said.

Gratitude costs no more than gratitude. Use both liberally.

No liberal man would im-pute a charge of unsteadiness to another for changing his opinion.

After all of one's plans have been smashed, one does not want to own way so persistently.

How Women in Their 40's
Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, weak nerves and moody spells.
Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more activity to enjoy life and assist calming nervous and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. WELL

WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—G. S. Messersmith, assistant secretary of state, consul general in Berlin when Hitler rose to power, used to be a lot more optimistic about Germany settling down to normal trade intercourse than he appears to be now. He predicted that "evolution" would soon follow revolution and urged the world to give Germany a chance to work through a period of stress and confusion. Today he is concerned about "world law and order" in trade intercourse, and says, "We ought to be prepared to protect our interests wherever they may be attacked."

Messersmith Worried Over
Trade Rights

German barter activities, particularly in South America, seem to be worrying the traders.
Widely experienced and minutely informed in foreign trade,
Mr. Messersmith has been an evangel of Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade policies. His zeal in this is not lessened, but he reveals deep concern over the subordination of the rights of business and property "to the will of individual leaders or nations for expansion and domination."

This writer has just obtained from a friend, an economist returning from Germany, his first close-up of what Dr. Walther Funk, German minister of economics, and his shrewd hunch-man, Hjalmar Schacht, are doing with their new militarized economics. My informant, who wrote books about the old, mellow, beery, bassoon Germany, had many old friends there and was steered right into the wheelhouse.
According to him, the new German formula is as revolutionary as communism. Every atom of surplus wealth is sluiced into the "dynamics" of expansion, and the Reich outreach is based on jug-handled trade relations which mean commercial subjugation for any short-enders who try to do business with it.

WE REGRET the lack of space to reprint here some merry little poems, such as "The Bird and the Burdock," and "The Tern and the Turnip," by Professor Robert W. Wood of Johns Hopkins, just recently honored by the British Royal society for his work in experimental physics. He tossed off a book of them, along with whimsical drawings, in between takes of "Fluorescence and Magnetic Rotation Spectra of Sodium Vapor and Their Analysis."

The Debunker
Of Death Ray Goes Poetic

He is one of this department's favorite scientific debunkers.
One of his high scores here was banishing the death-ray bogey—pertinent just now in view of our sensitiveness to Martian attack.
In this connection, the British government has good reason to give him a medal. An inventor was demonstrating his death ray to British war office representatives at Dawn. He focused the ray on a cow in a meadow 200 yards away and threw a switch.

The cow flopped, dead as a mackerel. The inventor collected and departed. Then they found the cow's feet wired to an underground circuit, connected with the inventor's switch.

Professor Wood, by scientific demonstrations, put the quietus on all death rays and offered to stand up against any of them. He invented tear gas for the Allies in the World war, developed a chemical eye by which "we can see and the enemy can't," and contributed greatly to the development of instruments of precision and spectroscopic research. He was educated at Harvard and the University of Berlin.

THE humanities, like sports and diplomacy, are becoming considerably scrambled these days. Professor Harry D. Gideonse, just taking over as head of Barnard college's department of social sciences, has been up to his ears all his life in dry-as-dust economics, and now, in his first work-out before the undergraduates, he swings on swing as "musical Hitlerism." He says, with the current divorce of reason and emotion, and with the latter going haywire, some "man on horseback" is apt to get us.

Warns: 'Man
On Horseback'
May Take Us

Professor Gideonse is of Dutch birth. He is a canny and cagey thinker, the author of several books on world economics and finance, and a sharp and precise critic of erratic trends of our civilization.

He is 37 years old, born in Rotterdam, here at the age of four, educated at Columbia and the University of Geneva, a former teacher of economics at Columbia, Barnard, Rutgers and the University of Chicago.

THE SIN OF LYING

LESSON TEXT.—Exodus 20:16; John 8:42-
47; Ephesians 4:25
GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts.—Psalm 51:6.

lected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by "God is truth. The word truth describes the very nature of God.

Lying, therefore, reveals a character opposite from God. Satan is a liar. He was a liar from the beginning and is spiritually the father of all liars. A lie does not necessarily have to be an untruth. A statement of a truth may be a lie if its purpose is to deceive. A half truth may be the worst kind of a lie. Satan's lies are usually mixed with truth." Consider "modernism," which has enough truth in it to make it accepted by thousands of people, but sufficient error to deprive it of any power to save souls
(L. D. Higley).

I. Forbidden to Lie (Exod. 20:16)
This commandment specifically forbids perjury, which is one of the worst forms of lying, because it may result in the forfeiture of the very life of a fellow being. It is obvious, however, that it includes all forms of lying, whether in business, in social contacts, in the home, or in the church. We might do well to consider what the Bible has to say about whisperers, talebearers, backbiters, and others (see Lev. 19:16; II Cor 12:20). A man's reputation may be as easily ruined by a whispered lie over the back fence or the luncheon table as by formal perjury in the courtroom. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" at any time, anywhere, or in any way.

II. Fountain of Lies (Matt. 15:19, 20). Our constant concern for the body that it may be healthy, clean, and well groomed is commendable up to the point where it becomes an attempt to "glorify" the flesh. But after all, the body is not the most important thing. The heart is what makes a man (read Matt. 15:7-11).

But what comes out of man's unregenerate heart? What a horrible catalogue we read in verse 19!
It is not what a man eats or what he wears that makes him, but what is in his heart. How foolish then to hope to redeem humanity by improving housing, having better schools and bigger playgrounds. All these are desirable, but the one thing needful is that man's heart be washed in the blood of the Lord
Jesus Christ, that he be born again.

III. Father of Lies (John 8:42-47).
Liars had better consider their "family tree" and see how they like their spiritual father. He is lustful, murderous, and there is no truth in him (v. 44). If you belong to that family would you not like to change families and be born into God's family.

As we have already suggested, the prize lie of Satan is modern religious liberalism. We quote again from Mr. Higley: "The first lie was told by Satan and it brought about the fall of the human race.
The last lie . . . by Satan is being told even now . . . in the form of modernism, that makes the Church impotent even to save its own people." Let us have no part in putting forward this falsehood.

Note that in verses 45-47 Jesus challenges His enemies to convict Him of sin or of falsehood. No one has ever been able to meet that challenge. Even those who deny His Godhood and Saviourhood speak swelling words of commendation of His pure life and exalted moral teaching. If then He told the truth about other things, surely He spoke the truth about Himself. The claims He made for Himself as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world are plain and unmistakable.
If we deny them we either make Jesus a liar, or we lie ourselves, and it is obvious that the latter is the case.

IV. Forsaking of Lies (Eph. 4:25).
"Wherefore" refers us back to the preceding verses where we are told how, as Christians, we have put off the life of the "old man" (v. 22) and put on the "new man"; therefore we are to live in true holiness.
But evidently the Ephesian Christians still fell into their old heathen habits of lying. Would that the tendency had died out with the early Church, but as a matter of fact, it seems to have become aggravated as the years have come and gone.

Being in Christ—members of His body and thus united to one another in Him—should make us scrupulous-ly truthful toward all men. Let us —which means you and me—scrutinize every relationship of life and be sure that we have not by word, act, or inference told lies. Think carefully of your family life, your church life, your community life.
Deal with such practical things as grocery bills, taxes, tendencies to gossip. We preachers need to consider our sermons. Are they true to God's Word? Are they honestly prepared? "Do we 'stretch' our illustrations to make them effective?"
Surely all of us who bear the name of Christ must put away every form of falsehood.

WHAT to FAT and WHY

Feed Adolescent Correctly or Tragic Consequences
May Result, Warns C. Houston Goudiss; Teeth
Must Receive Special Consideration

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

OFFHAND, it may seem as if there could be very little connection between a deficient diet during adolescence and painful childbirth in later years. Yet it has been demonstrated clinically that there is a definite link. It has likewise been determined that the kind of food which is fed adolescents has a significant and far-reaching influence upon their teeth in later life, and in the case of girls, upon the teeth of their children when they in turn become mothers.

Preparation for Parenthood

Adolescence is a difficult period at best. And if a girl takes an unbalanced diet at this time, the result may be an unstable nervous system, poor physical development, lowered vitality and inability to fight off infections. This lack of strong resistance may open the way to dental disease and to a variety of other serious infections as well.

It has also been established that if a girl is poorly nourished during these years of rapid development, there may not be the slightest indication of that fact until she first becomes an expectant mother. Then she will pay for her mother's lack of nutrition knowledge.

Results of Calcium Deficiency
If her diet has been deficient in calcium, for example, her pelvic bones may be imperfectly developed, so that she suffers unnecessarily during the birth of her child. And if liberal amounts of calcium have not been stored in her body, she may be called upon to make needless sacrifices from her own body in the interests of her child. It is well known that if an expectant mother's diet is not abundantly supplied with calcium, the substance will be withdrawn from her own bones and teeth in an effort to meet the needs of the developing child.

An Aid to Dental Health
For although expectant mothers are not always aware of this important fact, it is true that the first or "baby" teeth are developed within the jaw during prenatal life, and the foundations for the second set are also laid at this time.
Unless the expectant mother's diet is very generously supplied with calcium, so as to allow adequate amounts for the baby's teeth and bones, nature will endeavor to meet the child's requirements by sacrificing calcium from the mother's own body. If she has no adequate reserve, then she may be forced to lose "a tooth for every child," or suffer even more serious dental ills.

Calcium-Rich Foods Required
Leading nutrition authorities hold that the average American diet is more deficient in calcium, perhaps, than in any other single nutrient. This is especially likely to be the case in the diet of the adolescent. For at that time, boys develop prodigious appetites and a tremendous capacity for carbohydrates or energy-producing foods, while girls become extremely finicky. Either they do not take enough food at meals, or they tend to eat too many rich mixtures between meals. As a result, the diet of both boys and girls is likely to contain an abundance of meat, fish, highly milled cereals and other refined foods, with inadequate amounts of the foods rich in calcium.

The Adolescent's Diet

To balance the diet properly, these necessary protein and energy foods should be supplemented by milk and cheese which are rich in calcium; by green leafy vegetables which are also a good source; by eggs and fruits, valued for their minerals and vitamins; and by bulky foods which supply sufficient cellulose to help promote regular health habits.

Mothers of adolescent children should make a conscientious and determined effort to feed them a diet rich in calcium and vitamins
A, C and D—the substances required, especially, for maintaining sound, healthy teeth. If milk and succulent fruits and vegetables

menus of the adolescent girl, they will go a long way toward helping to correct the "choosy" attitude toward food from which many older children suffer.

And if careful attention to diet is coupled with careful attention to sound hygienic habits, the health of our teen-age boys and girls will be greatly improved, and they will be more adequately prepared to assume the duties of parenthood.

Correct Dental Hygiene

It is vitally important that the proper care be given to the teeth and mouth. But it is quite unlikely that a correct routine will be followed unless mothers offer tactful advice and suggestions very frequently. For while the tiny child has his teeth brushed for him, and the young school child has his tooth-brushing ritual supervised, too often the adolescent is left to his own devices in this respect. That is a great mistake, as adolescents are sometimes careless in the care of their teeth.

Mothers must see to it that there are two toothbrushes, one for night and one for morning, so that it is never necessary to use a soggy brush. They must watch when the supply of tooth paste or powder runs low, and see that it is replaced. For it is surprising how few children can be persuaded to brush their teeth properly without an agreeable dentifrice! Mothers should take care to choose a den-tifrice that will preserve or restore luster in the teeth. For adolescents are extremely sensitive about their appearance and they must not be allowed to permit dingy teeth to spoil their smiles.

If mothers will feed their adolescents a correct diet and supervise their daily dental care, the coming generation will not only be more attractive to look at but should enjoy more abundant health.

LOCALS SHOW PROMISE EVEN THOUGH DEFEATED

Little Shamrocks Win To Make Good Start For Season

Opening the 1938-39 cage season the Klemme Shamrocks made the long trip to Woden and suffered a 28 to 21 defeat in a conference tilt. With only one member of the team back from last year the locals, although playing their first game together, showed promise of becoming a fast smooth-working quintet.

Starting with the opening whistle, both teams went to work in earnest, and the score was nearly even up to the half. In the third quarter the Shamrocks were in a deadly slump and succeeded in doing practically nothing. However in the final period they showed what they were made of and fought their way within four points of the Woden five, only to see Grosshuesch go out on fouls. From then on to the final gun the locals fought harder than ever, but the opposition was too stiff and they could not overcome the lead gained earlier in the game.

Grosshuesch stood out for the locals as he broke up play after play and scored six field goals and a charity toss for thirteen points.

Goslin, former Wesley star, and Anderson looked best for Woden, hitting the hoop for twelve and ten points, respectively.

Little Shamrocks Win

Lead by Allen Barz, diminutive sharpshooter, the Little Shamrocks trounced the Woden reserves 27 to 18. Barz hit the hoop for 12 points, while Gibbs, playing his first game, garnered 9 points. Rudisill and Buns looked alike in the scoring column for Woden as they chalked up six points apiece.

DROP NON-CONFERENCE GAME TO POWERFUL GARNER BASKETEERS

Little Shamrocks Take Second Win To Keep Perfect Record

Pitted against a strong Garner five, Tuesday night, the Shamrocks could not get their offense to click and lost a lop-sided game by a score of 24 to 13.

Jumping into an early lead the Garner quintet kept steadily piling up the score, and the half found the Shamrocks trailing 15 to 5. In the third quarter the Shamrocks came back with a lot of fight and managed to hold their opponents scoreless. In the final period, however, the Garner team was not to be denied and chalked up nine more points for their total of 24.

Kluckhohn led the Klemme scoring with 4 points, while Barz, Brinkman, Grange and Grosshuesch each got 2. Wicks scored a free throw to complete the scoring for the Shamrocks.

C. Stille manned the big guns for Garner, hitting the hoop for 11 points.

Little Shamrocks Record Clean

Trailing at the half by a score of 10 to 11 the Little Shamrocks, led by Barz, came back strong in the last half to win by a score of 18 to 13. Barz collected nine points for the Little Shamrocks, while Jacobson was high for the Garner reserves with five points.

New Czech Crisis Is Threatened By Pole-Hungarian Aggression

By Joseph W. La Bine

DOES EUROPE'S FATE LIE IN RUTHENIA? (SEE FOREIGN)

Poland is helping Hungary capture Ruthenia, in return for which Hungary is reportedly helping Poland capture the balance of Slovakia (Czech area above shaded section, which represents land just ceded to Hungary). This deal may bring a serious breach with Germany, blocking the Reich's southeastward expansion.

Foreign

After Czechoslovakia made peace with Germany by ceding Sudeten border areas to the Reich, Poland and Hungary jumped in with similar claims. Poland was pacified when war-torn Teschen was returned. To Hungary went the southern portion of Slovakia and a small corner of Ruthenia (see striped portion of map), a settlement arranged jointly by Germany and Italy. But the bulk of little Ruthenia was retained by Czechoslovakia on Germany's insistence, much to the sorrow of Poland and Hungary who wanted a common border.

Smart Adolf Hitler has two reasons for demanding Ruthenia's autonomy. First, his economic policy has made Czechoslovakia a vassal state and at some future date Germany intends to march through that country into the Russian Ukraine and other parts of southeastern Europe. Should Hungary get Ruthenia and turn hostile to Germany, the march to the east would be blocked. Second, Ruthenia has immense value as a nucleus for Nazi propagandizing in the Ukraine and neighboring Rumania.

Meanwhile Czechoslovakia is in no position to defend herself from the band of wolves barking around her entire frontier. Not only is she under Germany's thumb, but Slovakia and Ruthenia have now been granted autonomy, which makes them largely independent of the central Prague government.

The result has been two unpublicized wars in which covetous Poland and Hungary have been interesting themselves under the explanation of "police action." The first centers in Ruthenia's Carpathian mountains, where Hungary has won a substantial portion of the natives to her cause. In the ensuing civil war between pro-Czech and pro-Hungarian Ruthenians, Polish and Hungarian border troops have intervened.

The other war is centered along Slovakia's Polish frontier, where Czech and Polish border troops have been fighting. Though none of the three concerned governments has spoken officially, it is quite obvious that Poland has agreed to help Hungary capture Ruthenia if Hungary will help Poland grab the rest of Slovakia. This would leave Czechoslovakia with nothing but western Bohemia and Moravia, located entirely within Germany's "mouth." It is doubtful that Germany would tolerate this threat to her proposed eastward expansion, but her opposition might aid the cause of anti-Nazi forces by arousing the ire of both Hungary and Poland.

Domestic

Under Secretary of State Cordell Hull, the U. S. has consummated 20 reciprocal trade agreements (including two with Canada) as authorized by the trade agreements act of 1934. Carried on aggressively, Mr. Hull's program now covers three-fifths of all American exports and imports. Behind the treaties is the "most-favored-nation" principle, under which contracting nations agree to nondiscriminatory treatment in the fixing of quotas. In each treaty, both signatory nations pledge not to impose internal taxes on imported articles higher than those imposed on similar articles of domestic or other origin.

Keystone and climax to this program is the reciprocal trade treaty just signed with Great Britain, including the dovetailing second treaty with Canada. Since a unilateral principle applies to Mr. Hull's treaties, the benefits of this U. S.-British agreement are now open to all other nations with which the U. S. has commercial treaties. Principal non-participants are Europe's dictator nations. The eventual aim of idealistic Mr. Hull is abandonment of international trade barriers and the idea of artificial self-sufficiency, and a more stabilized world currency.

Chief arguments against the Anglo-American pact come from business interests who claim their domestic sales are injured by British competition. Arguments in favor of the treaty will maintain that while British competition is increased on some domestically-manufactured items, a great many more items can now be exported to the United Kingdom, since most duty payments have been slashed. The state department expects U. S. agriculture will derive important benefits from the United Kingdom treaty, which grants concessions on many farm products. All duties on American wheat are removed, while on other items the duty is substantially reduced. But the new treaty with Canada fails to remedy many objections which featured the previous agreement with that dominion, since important concessions are still granted on livestock, cheese, eggs and many grains.

International

By persecuting Jews and subsidizing Christianity in favor of Nazi ideology, Germany tells the world that a triumphant political philosophy is worth more to her than the world's good will. What Germany apparently fails to realize is that the resultant international resentment will ruin the Reich's export trade, thereby creating internal economic chaos. This pressure is already felt in Sudetenland and Austria, the recently annexed territories whose manufactured items must now bear the mark, "Made in Germany." Both areas find world anti-Nazi sentiment a serious threat to their once flourishing export business.

Meanwhile international plans to help German Jews are meeting inevitable opposition. Since most countries already have unemployment problems, few are willing to increase this burden by accepting new immigrants. They also realize that Jews are predominantly tradesmen and therefore fear their established business men would suffer from this new competition.

In the U. S., President Roosevelt has granted a six-month extension to German visitors rather than return them to the hostile Reich. He plans to ask congress for liberalized immigration laws which would permit the entry of more persecuted Jews, though congressional leaders like Sen. William E. Borah promise to oppose the plan.

MYRON C. TAYLOR

Plenty of money, but little land.

The U. S. and Great Britain are meanwhile taking a lead in consummation of the Jewish solution first proposed by Joseph P. Kennedy, U. S. ambassador to London. While Great Britain is surveying her colonies to find new homes for Jews, the state department has commissioned Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the intergovernmental refugees committee, to represent the U. S. in this work. American Jews are voluntarily digging up 100 million dollars to finance the project if England can provide land for resettlement purposes. The most likely spot is British Guiana, in South America, where Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain hopes to set aside 10,000 square miles.

But Germany is not co-operative. Although George Rublee, director of the international committee, has offered to discuss the Jew question with Berlin, he has received no definite reply. Preferring to ignore the U. S. and Great Britain, Germany is reported negotiating with several South American countries to find a Jewish haven. Regardless of who manages the exodus of these 700,000 unwanted Hebrews, they will find no refuge in Mexico's Lower California or Palestine.

Transportation

When President Roosevelt's railroad fact-finding committee refused carriers' request for a 15 per cent wage reduction, it became apparent that congress must find some solution to the nation's perplexing transportation problem. Not only are railroads now handicapped by duplicating lines and truck competition, but their expenses are being boosted $70,000,000 this year by the railroad retirement act of 1937.

Most suggested remedial legislation calls for (1) government subsidies under the guise of national defense, and (2) government loans to help railroads modernize equipment and extend their lines. Bills along these lines will probably be introduced by Montana's Sen. Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the senate's committee on interstate commerce and the railroad finance committee. Mr. Wheeler's two proposed laws would:

1. Empower railroads, even if they are in the process of reorganization, to obtain government loans by creating obligations prior to those now in existence.

2. Establish standards for financial reorganization, including provisions to "expedite the procedure" in these cases.

The second bill's purpose, Mr. Wheeler points out, is to permit reorganization without "strait-jacketing" the railroads and depriving existing bondholders of their just share in company earnings. This will probably win popular favor, but railroad executives are not likely to look upon new government loans as a cure for their ailment. At best, borrowing will only provide a temporary cure, piling up additional obligations without attempting to solve basic transportation problems.

SENATOR WHEELER

War

"Any attempt to apply to the conditions of today and tomorrow the inapplicable ideas and principles of the past neither would contribute to establishment of real peace in east Asia nor solve the immediate issues."

With the above statement, Japan has rejected a United States protest claiming invasion of American rights in China. The answer denies every charge made by the United States concerning Japanese violation of the "open door" to China and asks Washington to take into consideration the "new situation in east Asia."

Although Japan courts maintain that a contract is invalidated by changing circumstances, the United States cannot agree that a strictly Japanese legal tenet should be applied to international law. The answer makes no mention of the 1922 nine-power pact guaranteeing China's territorial integrity, but under Japan's new "changing conditions" philosophy it would seem that all previous international commitments have been thrown overboard. Consequently there appears to be no American recourse other than to accept Japan's domination of China.

While this battle of diplomacy rages, courageous China is making a desperate last-ditch stand west of Hankow. Current Jap operations are directed at cutting Chinese supply connections with Siberia and Indo-China, a campaign which relies chiefly on bombing. Yangtze river traffic between Shanghai and Nanking has been closed to foreigners under the guise of protection against Chinese guerrilla warfare. Actually, observers believe, the Japs want to keep Yangtze traffic exclusively for themselves.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Some of the Functions of Vitamin B₁—Reports Recent Discoveries of Its Relation to the Gastro-Intestinal Tract

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

PERHAPS no more dramatic chapter has ever been written in the history of nutritional science than the discovery of the chemical structure of the vitamin now known as B₁, and its artificial synthesis.

Inasmuch as a deficiency of this vitamin may have extremely far-reaching effects upon human health and happiness, it is important that every homemaker should learn something of its functions, its characteristics and its sources.

The Anti-Neuritic Substance

Vitamin B₁ is known to prevent and to cure a nerve disease called beriberi.

The disease was known in Ancient times in the Orient. It occurred in other countries during the Nineteenth century. And even in the Twentieth century, some of the British troops stationed in Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles during the World war came down with the disease.

Even before this vitamin was identified, a European investigator was seeking to determine why a small portion of milk added to a diet containing protein, fats, carbohydrates and minerals successfully nourished individuals who did not enjoy good health when the milk was omitted.

Chemical Identification

Many investigators sought for years to fathom the secret of this mysterious substance.

After long research by many distinguished investigators, two Americans reached a milestone in the history of nutritional science when they discovered the chemical structure of vitamin B₁, and learned how to synthesize it.

A Regulator of Body Processes

In the course of their work with vitamin B₁, nutritional scientists have discovered many other important functions of this vitamin.

It has been determined that this substance is essential to growth and that it is also necessary to promote normal appetite. Laboratory experiments with animals revealed that when fed upon a diet lacking vitamin B₁, the animals lost their desire for food and refused to eat until the vitamin was restored to their diet.

There is also some evidence that vitamin B₁ is necessary for the maintenance of normal muscular tone of the large intestine.

Aids Gastro-Intestinal Tract

Chemical studies on 75 patients led one investigator to conclude that a continual slight shortage of vitamin B₁ leads to definite changes in the motor and secretory mechanism of the gastro-intestinal tract.

There is also evidence that the vitamin B₁ requirement increases with the rate of growth and with increased energy expenditure.

For this reason, active working men and women should be amply supplied with this vitamin, and growing children should also have generous quantities.

Further investigations are now in progress and it is quite possible that many significant new facts will be unearthed in the near future.

In the meantime, there is enough evidence to warrant the belief that the absence of vitamin B₁ results in cellular alteration in the nervous system, intestine, pancreas, stomach, salivary glands, liver and other tissues.

The whole power of the body to resist infection appears to be decreased. This is especially true in the gastro-intestinal tract, probably owing to the action of the bacteria on its passage through the impaired alimentary tract.

Some Peculiarities of This Vitamin

Vitamin B₁ is soluble in water. For this reason, a large percentage of it may be lost if the water in which a food is soaked or cooked is discarded. Other ways in which this precious vitamin is lost are through refining cereals too highly, or when the natural acidity of a food is lowered by the addition of an alkali.

Preventing Vitamin B₁ Deficiency

It has been suggested that the health department of every village, town and city should not be content with protecting the local community against infectious diseases, but should be equally militant in endeavoring to safeguard its people against the dietary deficiency diseases which have been discovered through the recent advances in nutritional knowledge.

That is because many people who can easily afford the foods that furnish vitamin B₁ are consuming a diet deficient in this respect. This unfortunate situation may arise because they believe that their customary diet is adequate. Or, they conclude that appetite is a reliable guide to the meals that should be consumed.

Sources of Vitamin B₁

Investigation has established that foods yielding a good amount of vitamin B₁ include bran, milk, eggs, bananas, orange juice, carrots, spinach and cabbage.

One of America's outstanding nutritional scientists has stated that foods can be made to provide the necessary daily requirement of vitamin B₁ if half of the needed calories are taken in the form of fruits, vegetables, milk and eggs, and if at least half of the breads and cereals consumed are taken in the whole grain form. This suggests the advisability of adding some bran to muffins, waffles, and other quick breads when they are intended for the dietary of normal individuals. The same procedure can likewise be followed in serving hot or cold cereals.

Another distinguished authority holds that adequate amounts of vitamin B₁ can be furnished at a low cost if the homemaker will utilize larger quantities of the whole grain cereals and legumes. If the calories supplied by these foods are not desired—as when one is endeavoring to avoid gaining weight—vitamin B₁ may be obtained from suitable quantities of bran and the germ of the grain.

Foods That Help Promote Regularity

In addition to providing vitamin B₁, which helps to serve as a sort of intestinal tonic, bran and many fruits and vegetables help to add cellulose or bulk to the diet. Their fibrous framework is a great aid in promoting regular health habits.

Some foods are richer than others in cellulose or bulk. Good sources of this substance being notably bran, whole grain cereals, most raw fruits; dried fruits, such as prunes, figs and raisins; raw vegetables; such cooked vegetables as onions and leafy greens; and legumes, that is, dried beans and peas.

These foods, therefore, have a definite place in the diet of normal individuals. The homemaker should see to it that they are included regularly in her daily menus.

If that task is performed faithfully, it should help to develop a healthier and more vigorous race. ©—WNU—C. Houston Goudiss—1938—39

Grooming Aid To Business Girl's Career

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

BEAUTY is as beauty does in the office as elsewhere. Gradually there is being formed unwritten laws for office behavior and the girl who is aware of them, and obeys them, has a better chance of promotion than the girl who ignores them.

Take for instance the small matters of grooming. Small but important. Tidy appearance, personal daintiness, never obvious dress or make-up. Those you are familiar with, or should be if you are in business at all.

But just recently a personnel officer of an important company voiced

Long personal conversations and smoking during office hours are strictly taboo if you want to hold your job.

a few more office rules which she says are as essential as the golden rule!

Rules for Office Behavior

"Remember that good manners and courtesy mark a person's true character in a business office as truly as they do at a dinner party."

"Be sparing in the exercise of your charm. Most bosses prefer to pick their own charmers—after business hours."

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

To Keep Eyes Sparkling

Eyes—the windows of the soul—are the most important feature of the face. To keep the eyes clear and bright requires constant attention, especially if you are outdoors much during the day, or work in an office under artificial light.

An eye wash is as important as a soap and water cleansing for your face. Make it a habit to cleanse the eyes in the morning, as regularly as you cleanse your skin.

An excellent eye bath is a herbal compound that soothes and cleanses the eyes in a magical way. There is an eye cup attached to the top of the bottle.

Another phase of eye health and beauty has to do with your eyelids. Crepey eyelids detract from your beauty and can be prevented. There is a cream especially blended for the eyelids which really does the work. You simply smooth it on the lids and leave it there over night. It helps replenish the oils which have dried out and restores the natural, youthful skin texture.

Most Northern State

Minnesota is farther north than any other state. The northern part of Lake of the Woods county, formed in 1922 from the northern portion of Beltrami county, is farther north than any place in any other state in the Union. This part of the United States cannot be reached by land without passing over Canadian territory.

Again Is Revived the Romantic Story of the 'Hispaniola Treasure'

Expedition Led by Famous Adventurer, Capt. John D. Craig, Has Found Relics of Spanish Galleons Whose $20,000,000 Cargoes of Gold, Silver and Jewels Have Rested on Ocean Floor Since They Were Wrecked on Silver Shoals Reef Away Back in 1642.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

LAST summer the two-masted schooner, "Isabel," sailed out of the port of Puerto Plata on the island of Santo Domingo and headed north. On board were the members of "Capt. John D. Craig's Deep-Sea Diving Expedition in the Caribbean," sponsored by Waldo H. Logan, member of the Adventurers Club of Chicago and alumnus of Beloit college in Wisconsin. The purpose of the expedition was to take underwater pictures of marine life for the Beloit department of biology and the man selected for the job was Capt. John D. Craig, Hollywood's top producer of adventure movies, the man who is to make the movies of the salvaging of the "Lusitania" and the author of "Danger Is My Business."

Aerial surveys made in an airplane, furnished by the president of the Republic of Santo Domingo, had located their objective for this trip. It was Silver Shoals reef, a coral island 65 miles from Puerto Plata. The schooner dropped its anchor near the reef. Over the side went Captain Craig in the Craig-Nohl diving dress in which he has made record deep-sea dives. Down through 65 feet of the crystal-clear water he dropped until at last he stood on the floor of the ocean.

All around him were the fantastically-beautiful coral formations of which he would soon be taking movies in color, the first of their kind ever made. As he walked about on the floor of the sea, he saw ahead of him a dark object. For a moment he thought it was a coral "tree." Then as he came nearer its outlines emerged clearly in the soft light. Standing upright on the floor of the ocean, it was thickly encrusted with coral but not so much as to prevent his realizing what it was—an ancient cannon!

He stretched out his hand to touch it and reached across three centuries! In that moment he was "one with the such a rich prize. Evidently this fleet considered the latter alternative the lesser danger for it proceeded through Mona passage between the islands of Hispaniola (Haiti) and Puerto Rico and headed north for the open waters of the Atlantic.

And then the hurricane struck! Before the galleons had a chance to turn tail and head for the safety of the harbor at Puerto Plata, they were being driven north at a terrific speed by the howling wind.

Only One Ship Escapes.

For the galleons were driven on Silver Shoals reef which tore their wooden bottoms out as though they were paper. One frigate alone escaped and when it went back to Puerto Plata it found there a few survivors of the disaster who had managed to make their way back to that port on a raft.

During the next three decades reports of the great wealth that lay somewhere beneath the waters surrounding Silver Shoals began to spread through Europe. Several British expeditions set out to try to recover the treasure but they ended in failure.

Then a seafaring man from Maine, named William Phips, while on a voyage to the West Indies, learned from an old Spaniard what purported to be the exact location of the sunken galleons. Phips went to England and succeeded in interesting the duke of Albemarle in his plan for sal-recovered. One places it at 200,000 pounds sterling (approximately $1,000,000) in gold and silver, exclusive of the value of the jewels also found. Another gives the total amount as 300,000 pounds sterling ($1,500,000) while still another's estimate makes it $3,000,000.

Some of King James' greedy councillors advised him to seize the whole cargo for himself. But he refused and was content with the one-tenth allowed him by the law. That meant between 20,000 and 30,000 pounds sterling or something over $100,000. The lion's share of the treasure went to the duke of Albemarle, who received more than $0,000 pounds ($250,000).

The widest divergence among historians is in regard to the amount Phips himself received. One account says that it was 1,600 pounds sterling, while another places it as high as 12,000 pounds. But more important than the money he received was the fact that his success had won for him the royal favor and the immediate result was that the king made him a knight and later governor of Massachusetts.

Expeditions Fail.

During the years that followed many expeditions visited the vicinity of Silver Shoals to try to recover more of the "Hispaniola Treasure" but none of them was as successful as Phips had been. In most cases the treasure-hunters spent more money on their expeditions than they realized from the gold and silver which they managed to recover.

Because of these repeated failures, interest in the "Hispaniola Treasure" seems to have lagged until the middle of the Nineteenth century when a man named Dreene, who perfected the first successful diving apparatus, visited Silver Shoals. He found the wrecks of the Spanish galleons but he seems to have been more interested in the coral trees he found there than in the Spanish gold—at least, his writings are devoted almost exclusively to the coral formations.

Interest in this famous story of buried treasure has been revived by the discoveries of the Craig expedition, which included, in addition to the cannon which Captain Craig found standing upright, another one lying on the floor of the sea (as shown in the picture above) and a part of the anchor chain of one of the galleons (also pictured in this article). Incidentally, the flag of the Adventurers club, which has flown over both the North and South poles with Admiral Byrd, as well as being carried into many remote places all over the globe, was taken down under the sea for the first time by Captain Craig who draped it over the old Spanish cannon and took a picture of it there!

New Discoveries Possible.

By the time this article appears in print, Captain Craig will be leading another expedition to Silver Shoals to take more pictures of the coral growths and other undersea life there. Will he make other discoveries that reveal more details of the thrilling history of the "Hispaniola Treasure?" Will ultra-modern diving equipment and methods of blasting loose the coral growth of centuries, bring to light more "pieces of eight" and other kinds of treasure which went down with the galleons during the fierce storm that raged there away back in 1642?

The answer to those questions is most appropriately given in the historic Spanish phrase:

"Quien sabe?" ("Who knows!")

A question that comes to mind at any mention of the "Hispaniola Treasure" is, naturally: "Why haven't more efforts been made to recover that great wealth?" One very good reason is that no one knows the exact location of all the wrecked galleons.

Remember, they were being driven at a terrific rate of speed by the hurricane when they struck Silver Shoals and the other coral islets that dot the water around it. Some of them may have been carried a considerable distance before they sank to the bottom.

It would require considerable underwater exploring before the location of all the galleons could be determined, if indeed that is possible after 300 years. For the timbers of most of the ships have long since rotted away and disappeared and the treasure which they bore is probably now so heavily encrusted with coral as to make it almost inaccessible. If it could be located, there is no telling how difficult or expensive it would be to blast it loose.

Treacherous Currents.

Another difficulty is the danger involved in carrying on such operations. Treacherous currents sweep through the coral "forests" which grow on the floor of the ocean there. A diver who goes down is in constant danger of being carried into the intricate mazes of these forests and if that happens, the chances of his ever returning are very slight indeed.

He is in danger, too, of injury from the razor-edged coral formations which can easily slice through any kind of diving suit, except the unwieldy ones of metal, and which can cut through airlines as though they were cotton threads. And if the diver goes down with only a helmet on and touches one of these sharp projections with his hand, foot or any part of his unprotected body it means that his blood will be dyeing the water. And blood in the water means—sharks!

Yes, indeed, there are sharks down there! That's why Captain Craig and his divers carry with them compressed air guns with which to shoot steel darts to discourage any inquisitive shark that comes nosing around.

So, you see, it wouldn't be such an easy job to try to recover any part of the "Hispaniola Treasure" that happens to remain down there around Silver Shoals. It's difficult enough—and dangerous enough, too—taking the underwater moving pictures which is the reason for these Craig expeditions.

The danger part of it, however, seems to worry Capt. John Craig less than the other. For, as the title of his book indicates, "Danger Is His Business." He has been at it for more than half of the 35 years of his life. Born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1903, the son of a Scotch engineer who ran away from his home in Scotland at the age of 20, young Craig inherited some of his father's recklessness and wanderlust.

Started at 16.

His father died when he was 16 and he started to work to help his mother support his four brothers. Then by what seemed to be a miracle he was suddenly rich—oil was discovered on California lands owned by the Craigs and young Craig set out to see the world.

In India, Craig began shooting tigers to oblige the natives and ended by shooting them as a part of his job. A British picture company had sent two men to get wild animal photographs, both cameramen had been put out of action by the tigers, and Craig got their jobs.

Back in America Craig again did what many Americans would like to do: he tried to get a job in the movies—not as an actor, but as a cameraman. In India he had discovered the original building plans of the Taj Mahal and he wanted to sell a scenario based on the story of that historic monument. To earn money while trying to sell the Taj Mahal story he began his undersea photography—and discovered on the bottom of the ocean the job he wanted to do.

Since that time, Hollywood producers have sent him all over the world to get their "thrill shots" for them and some of the greatest of these have been under the water.

Wait, Mother—Ask Your Doctor First

Never give your children unknown "Margarin" remedies to take unless you ask your doctor.

A mother may save a few pennies giving her children unknown preparations. But a child's life is precious beyond pennies. So—Ask your doctor before you give any remedy you don't know all about.

And when giving the common children's remedy, milk of magnesia, always ask for "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Because for three generations Phillips' has been favored by many physicians as a standard, reliable and proved preparation, marvelously gentle for youngsters.

Many children like Phillips' in the newer form—tiny peppermint-flavored tablets that chew like candy. Each tablet contains the equivalent of one teaspoonful of the liquid Phillips'. 25¢ for a big box.

A bottle of Phillips' liquid Milk of Magnesia costs but 25¢. So—anyone can afford the genuine. Careful mothers ask for it by its full name "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

IOWA TREES
A map of the original forest cov-

The original forests were composed chiefly of elm, ash and walnut on the floodplains of the big water courses, with a cover of oak and hickory with considerable linden on the adjacent protected slopes.

the Junior class is getting along in old K. H. S.—M. W.

The Freshmen say: They enjoyed their Thanksgiving vacation very much and wish they could have many more like it.

They were highly entertained at the "hobo party" given by the "Jolly Juniors," Wednesday evening at the school gym.

Mr. Batchelder gave a very complete demonstration on how a camera operates. This is required in the General Science course.

In English they gave oral book reports on the book which they had read for this purpose.

The girls in glee club have been singing "The Big Brown Bear." They are practicing different pieces for "music night."

The Senior Home Economics girls are busy planning the school-board and faculty dinner which is to be given in the high school gym in the near future.

Students playing in band were glad to get a grade for it on their report cards. Or were they?

The Agriculture class took a field trip Wednesday out to Mrs. C. A. Arnold's and Ben Ridder's farms to look at different kinds and grades of livestock.

We were all sorry to lose Phyllis Swanson from our high school. She left recently with her parents to spend the winter in Florida.

Four members of the Agriculture class had a debate Friday. The question was "Tractors vs. Horses." Margie Blumer and Doris Johnson were on the affirmative side. Mildred Patterson and Stella Barz were the negative speakers. They each put up quite an argument and by a vote of the class the affirmative won, but the negatives still think that horses are needed on farms to some extent.

Mr. Batchelder announced that anyone wanting to go out for instrumental solo work could do so on Thursdays at 4:30 and those interested in vocal solo work could do so on Friday's at 4:00 p. m.

MAKING UP THE HOBOS

Wednesday, the Juniors were hurrying around the building making last minute preparations on their party for that night. The gym was fixed to represent a box car. Mr. Albert Schmidt let us have some of his bailed straw. These bails were all over the gym and in one corner there were a few of them put up on end to make a jail. Dwaine Johnson was the jail keeper, and a very good one, too. Everyone seemed to obey him when they looked that baseball bat in the face.

The all-school party opened with a "hobo dance." After everyone was in good spirits, we sat down on the floor and enjoyed some campaign speeches for king. After casting our votes, John Schwichtenberg was made king for the evening. We were then divided into six different groups, with a leader at the head of each, and sent out on a "hobo hunt." When everyone was back in the schoolhouse some games were played. After having some more campaign speeches, the queen of the evening was elected. The queen was Mildred Patterson.

The Juniors then gave a "Hobo Amateur Program," with Marvin Lemke as Master of Ceremonies. The program was broadcast over station NUTTY with the first number being the Junior "hobo band," consisting of Dorance, Marie, Elsie Ward, Dwaine, Margie and Elsie Thiemann. Elsie Ward then played "The Old Gray Mare" on her trombone. The next number on the program was "Lazybones," sung by Elsie Thiemann, which was followed by a poem "The Klemme Hoboes," by Margie Blumer. Howard Schoenwetter sang a number of songs, which were very much enjoyed. Marian Waterman then danced to the "Dipsie Doodle," accompanied by Mrs. George Lawhorn.

Tin cups and paper spoons were then passed out to paired off hoboes, and generous portions of Mulligan Stew and crackers were served at the close of the evening.

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

Marian Waterman has taken over the duties of Junior news reporter, as Wayne Buseman has given up the position. I'm sure that everyone will agree with me when I say that he did splendid work last week. As for me, I will try to keep up the good work and give you a "tip" now and then on how disloyal to our school we are very apt to be disloyal to our parents, to one another, and to the nation. Let's not cheat ourselves by defacing school property, by being the ornariest kid in school, by being stubborn, disorderly or disloyal. Let's hope and strive for a better understanding of the true spirit of school life.

Think only of the present, Think nothing of the past, Let our little bits of humor Put your troubles in the past.

FLASH! FLASH!

Folks it's happened at last. Teachers on level with students, "All Hoboes." Startling discovery made last Wednesday night when teachers appeared dressed as ancestors of the "Old Regime," at Hobo party of high school. Can you imagine that? We wonder if any of them on the way home stopped in and asked for a cup of coffee and a doughnut. Hats off to the King and Queen of Hoboes—Powerful Katunka Patterson and Midget Johnny "Bill" Schwichtenberg. It was learned that Ruben Grosshuesch on his way to the "HOBOS" party scared a pedestrian so bad he backed through Jack Etchen's garage door trying to hide.

O' O'!

We contend that Evelyn Lewis feels very much at ease now that she is sitting behind the great Romeo, Fred Boll P. S. The teacher can't see her now.

O' O'!

SPECIAL Marian Waterman confined to iron respirator. Because of "Charley Horse."

O' O'!

The Juniors should be thankful to the old Maestro, "Mike" Lemke, recently released from the hog callers' association, for the success of their Hobo party.

JUNIORS ENTERTAIN "HOBOS"

Wednesday, the Juniors were hurrying around the building making last minute preparations on their party for that night. The gym was fixed to represent a box car. Mr. Albert Schmidt let us have some of his bailed straw. These bails were all over the gym and in one corner there were a few of them put up on end to make a jail. Dwaine Johnson was the jail keeper, and a very good one, too. Everyone seemed to obey him when they looked that baseball bat in the face.

Friday the high school elected two cheer leaders to lead the students in yells at basketball games this season. Dwaine Johnson and Marvin Lemke received the most votes so they will try to get us all in good spirits and let the team know we are behind them. Marian Waterman is assistant to the two boys.

by "Cyclone"

Well, folks, we got beat by a team that was a little better than we were Friday night, but we don't expect to lose like that all the time... Do you know where a certain B. B. player and a freshman were Saturday night? We wonder how it happened a certain Klemme player helped Woden get an extra two points? "Flash" was really going to town Friday night.

We play Garner Tuesday night. They think they can run away with Klemme, but we'll have to wait and see.

The two yell leaders, Dwaine Johnson and Marvin Lemke, helped put the fight and pep into the team, as well as the student body, last Friday afternoon at a snappy pep meeting. We hope the whole assembly will keep up the spirit they now seem to have.

Penalized for That Which Was Unavoidable

W. B. Maxwell tells about the venerable Lordbury, whose caddie had for famous lord chancellor for second stroke after his been pulled out from under. WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

EMUEL F. PARTON

YORK.—In Europe, a few years ago, this writer met a man who had just interviewed Kemal Inonu, who is today Turkey's new dictator, succeeding Kemal Ataturk, who died recently. "He's the best hombre I ever met," said the writer. "He talked to me for hours, frank and honest, looking right in the eye and never flinching on anything. He was intelligent and brilliant and he didn't let me not to print anything. I had a great story. But, I started to write it, there was nothing there. I saw him many times after that, and realized he was a master in heart-reading which left no commitment whatsoever. I saw cagey diplomats kissed off just as I had been. Kemal is a marvel of brains and guile."

Small, fragile, deaf, ingratiate, Kemal Inonu is the hero of the Turkish army, premier until a few years ago, when he was mysteriously removed by Kemal Ataturk. There are rumors that he was engaged in international negotiations of such importance that he found it necessary to keep out of office and off-stage.

It was in 1920 that young Ismet joined Mustafa Kemal in Anatolia. By 1922, he had driven the Greeks out of Anatolia and Smyrna and in the period and thereafter he became Kemal Ataturk's chief military aide. He added to his laurels, when, at the 1923 Lausanne conference, he ran rings around British and Italian diplomats and won for Turkey virtually all her demands.

He was one of few men who really understood the confidence of Ataturk. He was a firm and exacting, at times, ruthless ruler of the army, and is said to lack none of the traditional specifications of the man.

It is apparent that Ismet Inonu is a man on keeping Turkey diplomat-ically, liquid, that he fully realizes the bargaining power of Turkey's monopoly over the Moslem bloc, that he probably will use this other strategic assets in making shrewd bargains.

ALL, austere Sumner Welles, a self precisionist in career diplomacy, is merely undersecretary of state, but off-stage he's the key-man of a critical international encounter and a policy draughtsman in whose hands a chart of our South American procedure is taking shape. He initiated and has diligently carried the "good neighbor" policy to Latin America, and his radio address urging a get-together in the Western Hemisphere received a press in those countries. But his plea for joint defense against "any threat of attack" is in interesting contrast to his speeches of a year ago, when he pleaded for the "nations of the world for a new world order, based on justice and law." He weighs the actualities of trade, finance and the collective safety and solvency of the Western world.

Something like a picture of a Western league of nations seems to emerge as the great imperialisms turn toward the raw material storehouse of South America.

After his graduation from Harvard in 1914, Franklin D. Roosevelt, an assistant secretary of the navy, led him enter career diplomacy. His early thirties, he was high commissioner to the Dominican Republic, the author of "Naboth's Vineyard," a two-volume study of the country. He was made ambassador to Cuba by President Roosevelt in 1933. He became undersecretary of state last year.

ROBERT DONAT, the English actor on the up-take in "The Citadel" and other films, made so many successful tries at the screen seven years ago that they called him "Screen Test" Donat. A competent actor, he met hard luck and was all but desperate, as something always went wrong. One day, in what he was sure would be his last try, the director told him to register despair. The irony of his merely imitating despair sent him into demonic laughter. Alexander Korda, in another room, heard him.

"Sign that man up, whoever he is," said Korda. "That's a great performance?" He had a great laugh. And they routed him right through to fame and riches. He won by challenging a family. "Don't despair," he said. "You can't despair."

Star Dust

★ Chorus: Gene Autry!
★ 'Discover' Nancy Kelly
★ Gary Cooper, Merchant
By Virginia Vale

SINCE quizzes are so popular these days, here's one for you movie-goers. The amusement you get out of it, (if any), will be your only reward.

1. What motion picture actor gets the most fan mail—almost 5,000 more letters each week than either Shirley Temple or Clark Gable?

2. What motion picture star is the most popular one now making "westerns"? (He's just about as popular as any star making any kind of pictures.)

3. What star who, according to owners of theaters in villages and small cities, draws good audiences when other, better publicized stars fail to do so, receives but $12,599 a picture, when stars getting far larger salaries draw many thousands more?

4. What star—but what's the use, when you know by now that the answer to all the questions is Gene Autry, Republic's singing cowboy.

Exhibitors in the smaller cities have been much smarter, apparently, than the ones in the big towns where Autry was concerned. They've shown his pictures for some years, and made money on them. The big towns haven't discovered him yet; his pictures aren't shown in the big movie palaces of the land.

He used to be a telegrapher for a railway; later he played the guitar and sang ballads for various small radio stations. Republic engaged him to make westerns, and immediately he was a success; now some of the other motion picture companies would like to get him away from that studio and can't do it.

His latest picture is "Rhythm of the Saddle"; his next will be "Western Jamboree."

Nancy Kelly thinks it's pretty funny that Hollywood "discovered" her after she made "Submarine Patrol," as she already had 52 pictures to her credit, was for a time the best-known actress on the radio, and had made an outstanding success on the

NANCY KELLY

New York stage. (And she is just seventeen!)

Her career started when, at the age of three, she won a "healthy baby" contest. That resulted in her becoming a photographers' model. Then she made pictures, in the East. When she acted in "The Great Gatsby," with Warner Baxter, he used to introduce her as "my future leading lady." They're both under contract now to Twentieth Century-Fox, so maybe he was just a little bit previous about making a perfectly good prophecy.

While he was working in "The Cowboy and the Lady" Gary Cooper designed a saddle. The man who made it for him had orders for others like it before he finished the first one, so they're going into partnership to market the "Gary Cooper saddle."

Lucille Manners has always thought she'd like to make a name for herself on the concert stage. Now she's had grand offers from South America and Australia—and can't accept them because of her radio commitments.

When Alan Deavitt, who plays the part of "Wong," the Oriental servant in "This Day Is Ours," answers the phone at home, he protects himself from telephonic time-wasters by answering in the dialect that he uses on the air. The other day Templeton Fox and Jay Jostyn were lunching with him and he didn't want to be disturbed. So, when he had to answer the phone, he resorted to his usual trick. "Velly spilly; Missa Deavitt no home," he said.

Then he almost collapsed. For the man at the other end of the wire had said: "Well, I'm just in town for the day and I wanted to repay the fifty dollars I borrowed from him two years ago," and then hung up!

ODDS AND ENDS—Priscilla Lane is crazy about the number "seven"; wears a little gold one on her coat lapels, for embroidered on all her clothes, for luck. "Wonder if anyone has told her that Lina Basquette went in heavily for 'sevens' years ago, on rings, bracelets, etc. . . . It's rumored to be the Mai Benget doesn't intend to be the 'Ma' quise de la Falaise much longer. "We, the People" maintains a large field organization to call upon people who apply to go on the program and look into their stories."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for December 11

THE SIN OF COVETOUSNESS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:17; Luke 12:15-21; 1 Timothy 6:6-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt not covet.—Exodus 20:17.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

"The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12). These are the words that came to the writer's mind as he read the Scripture portions assigned for this lesson. He would fain have set aside his own comments and used this column to print the words from the Bible. If any reader of these lines purposes to read just these efforts to expound the truth, and not to read the Bible itself, let me plead with you to stop here and turn to God's Word. Let its powerful truth grip your soul and change your life.

It seems peculiarly appropriate that this lesson on covetousness should come right in the midst of our preparations for Christmas, for it directs our attention away from things to God, from outward preparation to the preparation of the heart, from greedy desire to true liberality of heart. Christmas may be literally "made over" for all of us if we receive its truth.

I. A Command (Exod. 20:17).

"Thou shalt not covet."

This last commandment carries us "beyond the domain of civil magistracy into that intellectual realm of motive, desire, and thought, where God alone is Lord and Judge" (Dykes). It deals with the heart, out of which are all the issues of life. It reaches to the root of so much that is wicked and destructive in the world—the covetousness of man. The love of money makes men lie, steal, kill, cheat; in fact, "the whole realm of human interrelations is disorganized and broken up by the dishonoring of the tenth commandment" (Morgan).

II. A Warning (Luke 12:13-21).

"Beware of covetousness."

The teaching of this passage is so directly opposite to all ideas regarding such matters accepted by the world at large, that it may be a total surprise to some readers and attendants at Bible school.

The yardstick of success in the world—for an individual, and organization, or a nation; yes, even for many a church—is the possession of wealth, or property, or other "things." Write it then in large letters on the hearts and minds of our boys and girls, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (v. 15). The one who was known to his friends (and to himself) as "a rich man" (v. 16), but whom God knew as a "fool" (v. 20), had more than he could use for himself. He had to build new and bigger barns, and could not see the "barns" that were already prepared, for, as Am-brose says, "Thou hast barns—the bosoms of the needy, the houses of widows, the mouths of orphans and infants." He was a fool who loved money for himself. One wonders what he had to say for himself when that very night he was called into the presence of God to give an account of his stewardship (v. 20). If you are similarly situated and have the same attitude, what will you say in that day?

An important point which we must note is that Jesus expressly repudiated the connecting of His name with the so-called "social gospel" in His reply (v. 14) to the question of the covetous fellow who regarded his inheritance as of more importance than brotherly love. Those who are ignoring the gospel of redemption and claiming Jesus as a social reformer or the "judge and divider" of some new economic solution for the world's ills, need to read and ponder this verse. Every Christian is interested deeply in social problems, but knows that the first concern of Christ and His followers is the souls of men.

III. A Way of Victory (1 Tim. 6:6-10).

"Godliness with contentment." As a minister of the gospel the writer would first remind himself that this was written by Paul to the preacher Timothy. Brethren in the ministry, let us not fall into the temptation and snare that comes with the love of money.

In this dizzy age when many are so intent on making money that they have no time for home and children, church and fellowship, when men neglect their responsibilities and duties as citizens to get gain; when any dirty business is all right if it produces a profit; when "let gold produce their country, their friends, their God, their immortal souls" (Farrar)—yes, in this day let us remind men that "we brought us nothing into this world, and it is nothing that we can carry nothing out." Let us teach and exemplify in our lives the fact that the only real and worth-while gain in life is "godliness with contentment."

HOW TO SEW

Money making ideas for Christmas.

AN INTERESTING letter this morning says, "Our church bazaar is over and in winding up the last details and balancing my accounts I feel that I would be neglecting something if I did not express my appreciation for your Sewing Book No. 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery. We found many ideas in it that were real money makers. Our annual Christmas sale is now in course of preparation. Could you publish some new ideas for toys in the paper soon?"

Unusually attractive toys may be made quickly and at little cost from cheap cotton stockings. This demure yellowish tan kitten with bright red or blue ribbon is made from a stocking leg. The secret of giving toys of this type character is in making the stuffing firm and tight. Cotton or small pieces of clean, soft rags may be used. Push the stuffing firmly in place with a blunt stick.

Complete directions for cutting and making the body are given here. For the tail, cut a piece 6 inches long and 2 inches wide. Stitch the lengthwise edges together, tapering toward the end, then turn right side out, stuff and sew firmly in place. It is easy to draw the face. Notice in the sketch how the eyelids curve,

"POOR TRUST IS DEAD—BAD PAY KILLED HIM"

This sign with picture of "doggie," gone where all "doggies" go, hanging on the wall of a small store in a little North Carolina town which was plenty years ago, was my first acquaintance at the hint to pay cash. Some need a hint while others need a kick to make good their I. O. U's. The owner of that North Carolina store the kids called "OLD MAN CASH." What the grown-ups called him, I dunno.

It was said that he was a mind reader because he was always able to arrange to be at the spot where you had to look at that sign, and him, too, when you wanted credit. His cold stare and that sign caused stuttering of "the promise to pay tomorrow." It was told that some could not even utter the stutter when facing him and his sign.

In later years, after his retirement, speaking of his experience, he said, "There was a time when I was a Santa Claus and some folks seemed to think every day was December twenty-fifth, and no week had a pay day and no month, a first. It was then I decided to change my store habits and if possible the habits of some of my towns-people."

After thinking things over awhile, I made up my mind to advertise. I reasoned it out that a general alarm in the WEEKLY, the only paper in town, to tell about my store, the goods and the new policy of paying, would hit everybody and it would help me save shame-faces—some might feel sheepish while reading my advertisements and have a heart.

I got interested in advertising. I found other people, some of them my customers, read advertisements, so I helped it along the best I knew how. I put gingersnap words in my advertisements and some humor, and that's how the idea came for the POOR TRUST IS DEAD sign.

I also found that good-name goods had repeat sales and that started me concentrating on staples with the result that fussiness over what kind, no longer confused or irked. Dilly-dally selling efforts, wasting time and costing money passed out.

Customers bought baking powder, soda, flour, soap and other articles bearing identification marks. Kids called them pictures. Products put up in neat, convenient, honest weight and measured cartons, boxes, bottles and cans. What an improvement in business and the dispositions of the customers. I even improved with conditions so greatly changed for the better.

RABBITS AND MICE NOW GNAWING UNPROTECTED TREES

From now until next April will be "bark eating season" for rabbits and mice in Iowa, and that means trouble for the orchardist who doesn't have his trees protected, S W. Edgecombe, extension horticulturist at Iowa State College, warned Iowa fruit growers this week.

"Every year thousands of Iowa fruit trees are killed by gnawing rodents," Edgecombe asserted.

"Death to the tree invariably occurs when the pests chew completely around the trunk. Such a wound completely cuts off the food supply to the roots."

The best method of protecting fruit trees against this type of injury is to form a cylinder of one-fourth inch mesh wire screen around the base of each tree, jamming it down to a depth of several inches. The screen should protect the tree to a height of 18 inches. The cylinder can be held rigid by fastening the ends of the screen with twisted wire.

It is also a good idea, Edgecombe pointed out, to remove several inches of soil within a radius of 1 foot from the tree, replacing the soil with coarse cinders.

Edgecombe advised against using paint or tarpaper to protect trees against rodent injury. The ingredients in tar paper, particularly, are injurious, he said.

EAGLES

Ornithologists state that eagles should not be killed in Iowa for mounting purposes. The number of eagles in Iowa will not permit such killing without danger of extinction. A great many specimens are now preserved in this state and additional specimens are not needed, so authorities declare.

Hunters Warned About Rabbits

RABBIT HUNTERS SHOULD USE EXTREME CAUTION WHEN DRESSING RABBITS

You are taking chances with your health and life this year if you are not careful when cleaning rabbits. Rabbit fever (tularemia) is unusually prevalent among rabbits. They are sick and diseased and dangerous to humans because this disease is easily transferred from the animals to man. The germs enter the body through the skin of the hands, sometimes even when there is no cut or sore for entrance. A bone prick may result in death. For your own sake take the following precautions.

1. Buy a pair of rubber gloves. Wear them when you clean your rabbits, and prepare the meat for cooking.
2. Keep your hands away from your face and eyes while you are cleaning rabbits. The germ can be carried from infected rabbits to the eyes by your fingers.
3. Be especially careful with a rabbit that has a spotted liver.
4. Cook all rabbits thoroughly. This kills the germs.
5. Wash your hands carefully after cleaning rabbits.
6. Disinfect gloves.

Sixty-four cases and three deaths from this disease have been reported in the state.

Follow the precautions listed in this article. Don't be the next hunter to become a rabbit fever case.

Shamrocks Win From Kanawha To Break Even In Conference Rating

SHAMROCKS TASTE VICTORY AFTER PAIR OF DEFEATS

Have Standing Of .500 In Seven Eagles Conference

With two defeats in two starts marring their record, the Klemme High School Shamrocks came to life and eked out a 22 to 19 victory over a fighting Kanawha quintet. The victory gave the Shamrocks a standing of .500 in the Seven Eagles Conference having lost the season opener to Woden.

Both teams went to work early and the quarter found them deadlocked at 5 all. In the second quarter, however, the Shamrocks began to draw away, and the half found them out in front 13 to 7. In the last half the Kanawha five gradually cut down this lead, but late baskets by the Shamrocks prevented them from overcoming it.

Barz, playing his first game as a starter, for the varsity, was practically "red hot" and hit the hoop for 10 points to carry off scoring honors for the evening. Grosshuesch, Grange, Katter and Kluckhohn each accounted for a field goal, and Grosshuesch and Katter also collected a pair of charity tosses apiece. Trainer and Hollister looked alike for Kanawha with 5 points apiece, as they led their team's offensive.

Clean Slate

The Little Shamrocks kept a clean slate by nosing out the Kanawha reserves 14 to 10, for their third consecutive win. Brinkman led the scoring for the locals with 5 points.

W. F. Pavey was at Mount Auburn on business Friday, returning to Klemme, Saturday.

Family Gathering Held To Honor Elderly Klemme Lady Friday Eve

1939 AAA PROGRAM TO GET UNDERWAY HERE IN JAN.

Two-day meetings at which township AAA committeemen will be acquainted with the "docket" for the 1939 farm program will be held in every county in Iowa during January, according to information received by Ben V. Greiman, chairman of the county agricultural conservation committee.

Following these meetings tentative plans call for every farm in the state to be visited by a local AAA committeeman who will explain the program to the farm owner and assist him in drawing a map of his farm which will show him the maximum payments his farm could earn by full participation in the program.

Then it is up to the farmer to choose whether to conduct his farm to earn maximum benefits, partial benefits, or none. The program will be largely the same as last year, the principle change being to give county and township committeemen more authority to iron out local problems.

Acres allotments for corn, wheat and total soil-depleting crops for each farm will represent that farm's share of the national and state acreages as near as can be determined from the past history and productivity of the farm.

Claude Wickard, AAA administrator for the north central region, has pointed out in recent meetings that the 1939 farm plan is designed to encourage the production of a sufficient amount of all basic crops to meet every need for domestic consumption and export, to conserve the soil, and to assist the farmer in securing a fair share of the national income.

Weekly News Analysis

Dem-G.O.P. Coalition Gesture May Be 'Middle Ground' Trend

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Politics

America's political pendulum swings periodically from conservatism to liberalism and back again. Coolidge-Hoover conservatism was followed by Roosevelt liberalism, but the return swing to conservatism that started last November 8 is more apt to stop in the middle of the road, than to veer violently back to rock-ribbed Republicanism.

Washington observers, who claim President Roosevelt has discarded middle-road New Dealers in favor of "left-wingers" like Solicitor Gen. Robert H. Jackson and WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins, predict the President must either abandon this policy or lose the support of Postmaster Gen. James J. Farley. The President's answer will come when he names a successor to Attorney Gen. Homer S. Cummings.

GEORGE McNARY
He made friends with Democrats.

If Mr. Jackson is appointed, Mr. Farley will interpret the move as a build-up leading to Mr. Jackson's presidential nomination in 1940. He will place the same interpretation on any efforts to win Mr. Hopkins a cabinet post.

Mr. Farley, casting about for a 1940 possibility, is reported to look favorably on Secretary of State Cordell Hull, the only cabinet member who has refrained from casting his lot with any factional element within the Democratic party. Mr. Roosevelt's choice apparently lies between running for a third term or endorsing some middle-grounder like Secretary Hull.

Evidence is already piling up testifying to the political expediency of this middle road position. Republicans, who will at last make themselves heard in congress next month, are inclined to assume such an attitude rather than fight for a return to the traditional G. O. P. conservatism. In the senate, where Republicans now have 23 members, they need the support of only 26 Democrats, Farmer-Laborites, Progressives or Independents to hold a majority.

By catering to the middle-ground idea, the President can possibly forestall the rising tide of Republican strength which is being built on this very platform. He can also avert a revolt in Democratic ranks, which otherwise will almost certainly rise to the surface during next congress. A meeting of Republican and Democratic minds is already evident on curtailment of governmental expenditures and a new policy for administering relief.

Oregon's Sen. Charles L. McNary, Republican minority leader, has announced that "Republicans will join with other groups" on such a program. One of his plans, that of turning relief administration over to bipartisan state boards, finds expression in the bill being drafted by North Carolina's Sen. Josiah W. Bailey, a Democrat. His political cohort, Sen. Edward R. Burke of Nebraska, has announced that although the Bailey proposal is a "Democratic move," Republican support will be welcomed.

Foreign

Snugly ensconced in his Bavarian mountain aerie at Berchtesgaden, Adolf Hitler can await Christmas morning knowing his stocking will be full. Established in 1938 as the master of Europe, Der Fuehrer is now able to sit back and watch the spoils of his diplomatic and military conquests mount throughout Europe. Among the latest spoils:

(1) Little Czechoslovakia, reduced to vassaldom, has agreed to let Germany build two canals and a super-highway across her, connecting Germany proper with Austria via a new short route. Both canals (one on the Moldau, the other on the Oder) will join with the Danube river and furnish an unbroken waterway from the North and Baltic seas to the Black sea. Thus will Hitler's economic grip on central Europe be strengthened.

(2) With Great Britain definitely frightened, Hitler has won a peace treaty with Britain's ally, France, whereby a barrier is erected between these two great European democracies. More important still is the fact that France's current economic and political chaos is a direct result of war preparations necessitated by Germany's aggressive policy. To put down a strong Communist uprising, Premier Edouard Daladier has been forced to exercise an iron hand that looks dangerously like Fascism.

(3) It is quite probable that Rumania's King Carol, having shopped unsuccessfully for financial aid in Great Britain, will accept Hitler's promise to buy Rumanian wheat and oil in return for German manufactured articles. This would give Germany a new wedge in her economic drive to the southeast.

The only unpleasant note in an otherwise happy Bavarian Christmas will be Poland's attitude. Although Hitler safeguarded his path to the southeast by blocking a proposed Hungarian-Polish plan to annex Ruthenia from Czechoslovakia, the victory has brought him Poland's undying hatred. Poland will oppose Der Fuehrer's plan to create a new Ukraine republic in Sub-Carpathian Russia, and will also tighten its friendship bonds with Russia at Germany's expense.

International

One day 115 years ago, President James Monroe stuck out his chin against the "holy alliance" then threatening the world in general and South America in particular. His statement: "We could not view an interposition for oppressing them (the Spanish-American republics) or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

In the century that followed, the U. S. has clung tenaciously to its Monroe doctrine, sometimes blushing guiltily at charges of "dollar diplomacy" in South America. But in 1938 there has arisen a threat far greater than the holy alliance, namely, the Fascist-Nazi triumvirate of Germany, Italy and Japan.

How far these nations have penetrated into South America is debatable, but few observers deny the threat. Though the triumvirate may have no territorial ambitions in Pan America, it is significant that Nazi-Fascist foreign trade success runs hand in hand with political success. Diplomat and commercial salesman are often one and the same person.

U. S. weapons to fight this aggression are trade agreements, a Pan-American "league of nations" and co-ordinated Western hemisphere defense. To offer these weapons, a U. S. delegation is attending the eighth Pan-American conference in Lima, Peru, which opens strategically at a time when American nations are anxious to air their troubles. Notably included in the U. S.

EX-CANDIDATE LANDON

group is Alfred M. Landon, 1936 Republican presidential nominee, which indicates that political parties are willing to confine their opposition to domestic affairs when Western hemisphere security is involved.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull has already memorized his proposals, but his presentation will be staged so elaborately that South American nations themselves will voice the plans. Reason: If the U. S. were to take outright lead in defending the Western hemisphere, the "dollar diplomacy" charge would again appear. That Mr. Hull will succeed in solidifying Pan America is conceded by most observers, who recall that in 1933 he injected an incredible spirit of optimism into the forlorn Montevideo conference.

Religion

The near-fatal heart attack which seized Pope Pius XI recently leads persons close to the Vatican to believe he will soon issue an encyclical on world issues, reaffirming his pronounced stand against armed conflicts, Germany's Jewish persecution and communism. The pope is believed anxious to make such a statement immediately because he is convinced another heart attack may prove fatal.

Labor

Throughout the U. S. are about 2,500 manufacturing firms who share profits or managerial responsibility with employees. Proctor & Gamble workers contribute 3 per cent of their wages against a 5 to 15 per cent contribution by the management (based on seniority) and from this fund employees buy stock. McCormick & Co., Baltimore importers, not only share profits but organize workers to help run the business under a "multiple management" plan.

Such firms, whose number is increasing yearly, generally have little labor trouble. Example: The American Rolling Mill company of Middletown, Ohio, has never experienced a labor disagreement in its 38 years of operation. Even C. I. O.,

WALTER D. FULLER
For depreciation, profit-sharing.

which organized the bulk of steel plants, was defeated 1,200 to 400 in one American Rolling Mill labor election.

If profit-sharing could be extended, most U. S. industrialists believe employees would be better satisfied, employment would become less fluctuant, and our national financial picture would be improved. In Washington, a senate finance subcommittee investigating the plan was recently told it would be "an unbeatable defense of the capitalist system."

Members of this committee are Michigan's Sen. Arthur Vandenberg and Iowa's Sen. Clyde Herring. Their purpose is to unearth facts about profit-sharing merits and find methods of expanding it. The long range ambition is to make the working man more prosperous and more able to bear a share of the U. S. tax load. Thus, by splitting its profits, industry would help itself by winning a more equitable division of tax burden.

But an expansion of profit-sharing must come either voluntarily or through government insistence, and voluntary adoption of the plan by industry would be a long, discouraging battle of coaxing and education. Though neither committee member yet advocates it, both Senators Vandenberg and Herring have been feeling out sentiment on an "incentive taxation" plan. Under it the government would give tax credits to profit-sharing concerns, meanwhile penalizing non-conforming firms. Tax credits might be given on employers' social security payments, though the mere mention of such tampering with social security has already aroused protest from administration sources.

Most of the committee's witnesses have gone on record opposing the "incentive tax" because it would impose either reward or penalty for an employer's decision on a matter which should be entirely voluntary. Loudest supporter has been Walter D. Fuller, president of the Curtis Publishing company, who wants a more liberal tax treatment to stimulate re-employment. He also thinks industrial plant expansion will follow if employers are allowed to charge off more on depreciation than at present thereby encouraging early replacement of present obsolete equipment.

Labor's opinion has been expressed by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who naturally favors profit-sharing provided it does not tend to replace collective bargaining. This issue may be the battleground on which profit-sharing plans rise or fall, since collective bargaining is based on compulsion rather than co-operation. Before adopting the profit-sharing principle, many industrialists would demand that the threatening club of organized labor be removed.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses the Child Who Has a Lagging Appetite; Tells What to Do for the Fussy Eater

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

IT HAS been well said that with the knowledge of nutrition now at the command of practically every mother, there should not be one ill-nourished child in our land. Unfortunately, statistics show that possibly one-half of the children in this country are either underweight, undernourished or malnourished.

Many factors may be responsible for this state of affairs. Some children are fed incorrectly owing to the fact that the family income is small and the mother has not learned how to utilize low-cost foods that are rich in protective minerals and vitamins in place of those that are higher priced. In other families, the mothers do not realize the importance of providing a well-rounded diet for growing children. But the problems of these homemakers are more easily remedied, perhaps, than those of mothers who plan a well-balanced diet, but find that their child lacks interest in, or even refuses to eat the food that has been prepared so carefully.

Developing the Right Attitude

Strange as it may seem, such difficulties often arise because a mother fails to give the necessary consideration to developing in the young child a proper attitude toward food. Some children need to be taught that they must eat enough food for their body requirements. It is part of the training they should have in early childhood, so that they develop a willingness to eat what is put before them, to try new foods when offered, and to become increasingly independent in making a wise selection at mealtimes.

If a child has been properly conditioned in these respects from his earliest years, mothers will seldom find themselves faced with a "child who will not eat."

Problem of Anorexia

All normal children will, at times, exhibit a lack of appetite. We are not concerned here with occasions when a child who usually eats well feels no desire for food. Such lack of appetite may mean the beginning of a cold or some other illness and should be carefully investigated. Unfortunately, however, many mothers of young children are faced with a chronic lack of appetite in their children—a condition that physicians describe as anorexia. In order to correct this condition it is necessary to understand its causes and to use wisdom in helping to remove them.

Find the Causes

When a child chronically lacks interest in food, the mother should set about systematically to learn the reasons why. Possibly the co-operation of your physician will be required, for sometimes obscure physical causes may be responsible, such as faulty elimination, diseased tonsils or teeth or some other focal infection. On the other hand, it frequently occurs that a changed attitude on the part of the mother in presenting food is all that is necessary to alter completely a child's attitude in regard to his meals.

It is interesting to note, however, that in studying a large group of children with poor appetites, one investigator found that 82 per cent of the children were more than average in height and narrow in body build.

Faulty Diet May Destroy Appetite

Frequently, a child's lack of interest in food may be traced directly to poor choice among the foods presented to him. It has been repeatedly demonstrated, for example, that when the diet lacks vitamin B, appetite decreases, so that there is less desire for food of any kind. Then, too, when a child's diet contains too much fat, digestion may be delayed and this in turn may interfere with the appetite for the next meal. While some children thrive better with a between-meal feeding, in others it seems to destroy appetite for the meal that is to follow. And with some children, "fussiness" at mealtimes may be due to the fact that their diet contains too many concentrated foods, too few crisp raw ones that stimulate appetite.

Fatigue a Factor

Occasionally, a child does not eat well merely because he is too tired. Even though he obtains adequate sleep at night, too much or too prolonged exercise or excitement may result in fatigue during the day. If a child spends too much time with adults, overstimulation may be the result. And in the case of older children, their school work may be troubling them.

Another frequent cause of lagging appetite is the constant nervous tension to be observed in some households. If a child is allowed to become unhappy, angry, or worried over some uncompleted school assignment, it may interfere seriously with his appetite and consequently with his nutrition. With younger children, the fact that they are able to attract favorable attention from adults by refusing to eat often stimulates them to repeat their refusal as long as mother shows concern over their antics.

Parents' Attitude Important

This brings us to perhaps the most important factor in dealing with the young, finicky eater who eats sparingly and whose dislikes usually far outnumber his likes. Such a child must be encouraged tactfully to eat a wide variety of foods, but mothers must not be over-solicitous, nor must they become obviously angry or irritated when the child refuses food. Scolding, punishment and threats of punishment should be avoided, as they defeat their purpose. Remember, too, that precept is a powerful teacher, and that a child's dislike for certain foods may have been instilled by a none-too-guardedly expressed dislike of a similar food on the part of an adult.

Some Helpful Hints

It may be necessary for the entire family to live more quietly, in order to give the finicky eater a chance to be quiet and relaxed. There must be regularity of meals and mealtimes must be peaceful. Keep the table conversation general and impersonal in character before older children. See to it that younger ones eat by themselves.

Often a short rest before meals will help a child to become relaxed completely. And frequently, a new method of presenting foods will result in a changed attitude on the part of the child.

Foods for young children should not be seasoned too highly. In general, condiments should be avoided. Strong-flavored vegetables, as a rule, are not well liked, and if introduced in the young child's diet should be combined with some familiar, and mild-tasting food. In cooking vegetables, keep the pieces large enough so that the child can identify what he is eating. Include a crisp food in each meal.

Finally, remember that a child's eating habits cannot be changed overnight. Changes should be introduced gradually, so that he is scarcely aware of what is going on.

Fruit Juices Essential to Sound Teeth

PATRICIA LINDSAY

MANY savage tribes have wonderful teeth in spite of the fact they never clean them and do not know what a tooth brush is. It is largely due to the plentiful use of the juices of which have a valuable cleansing effect.

In recent years, a medical book has come to state, "some dental authorities have advocated cleaning teeth with fruit juices or food acids, such as diluted cider vinegar, instead of the usual alkaline tooth powders. It is claimed that fruit acids promote the increased flow of saliva and in this way bring about greater alkaline condition of the mouth within a few minutes. Saliva, as you know, is naturally alkaline. Furthermore fruit is somewhat antiseptic and is always healthful."

Plenty of fresh fruit juices for beauty!

When fruit is reasonable in price and plentiful you should eat much of it. Especially fruits with juices. And you should drink fruit juices without sugar to reap the greatest benefit and nourishment.

Right Foods Aid Tooth Health

There is one factor in maintaining sound and healthy teeth which is commonly overlooked, especially while a child is growing. That is which foods tend to strengthen and prolong the life of teeth. If the diet is lacking in the elements for building teeth and bones, then decay and loss of teeth is almost inevitable.

Medical authorities commonly agree on certain foods rich in lime and organic mineral salts, such as whole wheat bread in preference to white bread; shredded wheat and whole grain products such as oatmeal will help to build strong healthy teeth. Milk and eggs are both rich in lime. And vegetables eaten with the water in which they are cooked are strongly recommended.

Children and adults alike should eat natural foods, calling for exercise of the teeth and supplying all the elements provided by nature.

And every child should be trained early in life in the care of the teeth and in mouth hygiene.

Game of Chess Has Been Played Since 3300 B. C.

There must be something remarkable about a game that survives for centuries. Chess is played in international tournaments and in homes and in teashops, but what nobody seems at all clear about is who started it?

The Chinese say that they can trace chess in their own country for more than 20 centuries, but we know it is older than that, asserts a writer in London Answers magazine, for excavations at the Egyptian pyramids brought to light a drawing showing chess being played during the sixth Egyptian dynasty, which is about 3300 B. C.

However, the game was brought to England by the Crusaders about the year A. D. 1095.

The Brahmins of India are believed to be the inventors of playing cards, and to have sent them east and west, to Arabia, Persia and China.

The first mention of them in England occurs about 1278, when Queen Eleanor, wife of Edward I, is supposed to have imported them.

A Southwestern Cowboy Became 'Novelist of the Cattle Kingdom'

In "The Hired Man on Horseback," the Widow of Eugene Manlove Rhodes Tells the Fascinating Story of His Eventful Career and a Well-Known Critic Pays Tribute to His Literary Importance as the Ablest Interpreter of Life on the Desert Range.

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHEN Eugene Manlove Rhodes died in California on June 27, 1934, they took him back to New Mexico and buried him in a grave dug in the white gypsum on the summit of his beloved San Andres mountains. At its head they erected a simple marker which bore only his name and the words, "Paso por Aqui."

"Paso por Aqui"—that is the Spanish for "He passed by here" and it was the phrase used by the Spanish Conquistadores who visited El Morro, Inscription Rock, and carved their names on this landmark of the Southwest. But it has more meaning than its simple phrasing suggests—especially when it is applied to Gene Rhodes. That grave, with its unpretentious marker, in the mountains of New Mexico, has become a shrine for thousands of Americans who have read the novels, short stories and poems written by the man who "passed by here."

"They are the only body of fiction devoted to the cattle kingdom which is both true to it and written by an artist in prose. Surely that is a great deal: to have given fiction its sole mature expression in one era in our past, one portion of the experience that has gone to make up America." Such are the words of Bernard DeVoto, one of America's leading literary critics, in his introduction to the book, "The Hired Man on Horseback—My Story of Eugene Manlove Rhodes," written by his wife, May Davison Rhodes and published recently by the Houghton Mifflin company of Boston.

The story of Eugene Manlove Rhodes, as told in this biography, is the tale of a cowboy who, by his own efforts, became one of America's best-known writers. More than that, he is one of the best-loved, for there is a veritable "Gene Rhodes cult" of American readers.

Born in a log house in Tecumseh, Neb., January 19, 1869, Gene Rhodes was the son of Hinman Rhodes, who served as colonel of the Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in the War Between the States and who pioneered in Kansas and Nebraska after the war. In 1881 Colonel Rhodes was appointed Indian agent for the Mesquero Apaches in New Mexico and there young Gene grew up.

On the Trail of Geronimo.

At the age of thirteen he bought a saddle with soap coupons and became a horse wrangler for the McDonald cow outfit at Carrizozo Springs. By the time he was seventeen he was acting as a guide and government scout during the Geronimo uprising of 1886. When he was twenty-one, he borrowed $50 from his father and started to school at San Jose, Calif. He remained there two years, until his money ran out. Then he went back to New Mexico and after a short period of school-teaching became a cowboy.

He became known as a reckless rider with a positive mania for pitting his skill against that of bad horses. His fellow cowboys said of him that he could ride anything that wore hair but he once modestly admitted that in more than 25 years of riding he had been thrown three times. But for all this riding prowess, he was most noted for his reading.

"Even when riding broncs he read," writes his wife. "He carried magazines in his saddle pockets. For every time he turned a page, there is a probability the bronc would swallow his neck. One horse was given a special reading breaking. . . . When the bronc went over backward with an earth-shaking thud, Gene, having thrown himself clear as usual, raced to the animal's head before it could make a move to get up and sat down on it. Sitting on the bronc's head, Gene pulled a volume of Browning from his jumper pocket and lost himself in communion with the immortal poet."

Nor did he confine his reading habits to the "hurricane deck of a bronc." "When books and magazines were not available, Gene read even the labels on cans, commending as especially enjoyable English the label on Worcestershire sauce bottles, which he read a countless number of times." Small wonder, then, that he should turn to writing.

His first work, short stories and poems, appeared in the Out West magazine in 1902 but within five years some of his short stories were appearing in half a dozen of our leading magazines.

Beginnings of a Romance.

Incidentally, it was one of his poems which led to a correspondence with a young widow back in New York state and their romance developed into the marriage of Eugene Manlove Rhodes, cowboy, and May Davison, recently graduated from a nurse's training school in Philadelphia. "The Hired Man on Horseback" is the story of their life together, in poverty and in prosperity, in Rhodes' beloved Southwest and during a long period of exile which he spent in the East.

Admirably supplementing that human interest document is Bernard DeVoto's introduction to the book which bears the title of "The Novelist of the Cattle Kingdom." In discussing "Gene Rhodes, writer of horse operas, as a serious literary artist," DeVoto declares:

"He was a realist not only of the externals of life in a vivid, brief era but a realist of the beliefs and aspirations that gave it vitality. And the historian must conscientiously point out that, during the 1920's when the more important part of Rhodes' work was done, it was not fashionable in American literature to assert the tenets of democracy nor to affirm the dignity of common life and the worth of native American ways and values. His work ran exactly counter to the main stream of fiction and criticism during that museum decade, which may be another reason why criticism ignored it."

A "Hired Man on Horseback" in the country which Eugene Manlove Rhodes loved and wrote about.

In other words, this cowboy-writer was an "American patriot" in the truest sense of the word. It seems strange that we have had to wait until after his death to realize that fact and pay tribute, as Mr DeVoto has done, to him for it.

What is there to distinguish Rhodes from other writers of cowboy life? It is his authenticity. For, as Mr DeVoto observes, "Rhodes' people talk like living men." Confirmation of that fact is this statement of J. Frank Dobie, who knows his West if anyone does: "They talk in a blithe way that no other fiction writer has made cowboys talk, unless O. Henry be excepted. Mr. Rhodes knows literature, and while he will not have one of his cowboys sacrifice fidelity to his own speech in order to say a good thing, only O. Henry and Alfred Henry Lewis among the fictionists of the West can vie with him in the grace of literary allusion. It seems perfectly natural for Pres Lewis in 'The Trusty Knaves,' after biting off a chew of tobacco, to say:

"You keep your voice down, brother. If you yell at me any more I'm liable to prophesy against you. . . . When you got any communications for me I want 'em sweet and low, like the wind of the western sea."

What! A cowboy quoting Tennyson! Yes, they did it and here's why: a great many of them

May Davison Rhodes

smoked a popular brand of tobacco that came in little cloth bags and with them cigarette papers with which to "roll your own." This tobacco company once distributed, with the tobacco, paper-bound reprints of the classics of English literature. Gene Rhodes, the "reading cowboy," wasn't the only one who absorbed literary culture from those little paper-bound books!

A Born Story-Teller.

That reading nepea make him the literary artist that he was—plus the fact that he was a born

Why the title "The Hired Man on Horseback" for this biography of Eugene Manlove Rhodes? It's because literary critics, in commenting upon one of his novels, suggested that he made the cowboy a much too romantic figure. "The typical cowboy is . . . simply a riding farmhand," said James Stephens in the International Book Review and his words were echoed in statements which appeared on the editorial pages of the Minneapolis Tribune and the San Francisco Chronicle to the effect that "The cowboy, after all, was never anything more than a hired man on horseback."

Thereupon Rhodes sat himself down and wrote

THE HIRED MAN ON HORSEBACK

(With apologies to G. K. Chesterton and Don Juan of Austria.)

Harp and flute and violin, throbbing through the night,
Merry eyes and tender eyes, dark head and bright,
Moon shadow on the sundial to mark the moments fleet,
The magic and enchanted hours where moonlight lovers meet,
And the harp notes come all brokenly by night wind stirred,
But the hired man on horseback is singing to the herd!

(Whoopie-ti-yo-o-o! Hi yo-o, my little dogies!)

Doggerel upon his lips and valor in his heart,
Not to flinch and not to fall, not to shirk his part,
Wearily and wearily he sees the stars wheel by,
And he knows his guard is nearly done by the great clock in the sky.
He hears the Last Guard coming and he hears their song begun,
A foolish song he will forget when he forgets the sun.

(Whoopie-ti-yo-o-o! Hi yo-o, my little dogies!)

"We got 'em now, you sleepy men, so pull your freight to bed
And pound your ear an hour or two before the east is red."
If to his dreams a face may come? Ah, turn your eyes away!
Nor guess what face may come by dream that never comes by day.
Red dawn breaking through the desert murk;
The hired man on horseback goes laughing to his work.

The broker's in his office before the stroke of ten.
He buys and smiles and he sells and smiles at word of other men,
But he gets his little commission flat, whether they buy or sell,
So be it drought or storm or flood, the broker's crops do well.
They are short of Katy Common, they are long on Zinc Preferred—
But the hired man on horseback is swimming with the herd!

White horns gleaming where the flood rolls brown,
Lefty fighting the lower point as the current sweeps them down.
Lefty fighting the stubborn steers that will not turn or slow.
They press beside him, they swim below him—"Come out, and let them go!"

But Lefty does not leave them and Lefty tries once more,
He is swinging the wild leaders in toward the northern shore;
"He'll do to ride the river with!" (Bridging the years between, Men shall use those words again—and wonder what they mean.)
He is back to turn the stragglers in to follow the leader through
When a cottonwood snag comes twisting down with long arms lashing hate, Underneath horse and wearied man—and they see it come, too late!

—A brown hand lifted in the splashing spray;
Sun upon golden head that never will be gray;
A low mound bare until new grass is grown—
But the Palo Pinto trail herd has crossed the Cimarron!

A little midnight supper when the play is done,
Glancing lights and and sparkling eyes the night is just begun.
Beautiful night, O night of love!—Youth and joy are met.
Shine on our enchantment still! "Sweet, your eyes are wet."
"Dear, they're wet for us alone!" Such is the lover's creed.
—But the hired man on horseback is off with the stampede.

There is no star in the pit-black night, there is none to know or blame,
And a hundred yards to left or right, there is safety there—and shame!
A stone throw out on either side, with none to guess or tell—
But the hired man on horseback has raised the rebel yell!

He has turned to loosen his saddle strings, he has fumbled his slicker free,
He whirled it high and he snaps it wide wherever the foremost be.
He slaps it into a longhorn's eyes till he falters in his stride—
An oath and a shot, a laugh and a shot, and his wild mates race beside,
A pony stumbles—his! he is up, unhurt and running still! he is up, unhurt!
"Turn 'em, turn 'em, turn 'em, Charlie! Good boy, Bill!"
They are crashing through the cedar mottles, they are skating the rim-rock slick.
They are thundering through the cactus fields where the badger holes are thick.

Day is breaking, clouds are lifting, leaders turn to mill—
"Hold 'em, cowboys! Turn 'em, Charlie! God! Where's Bill!"

The proud Young Intellectuals, a cultured folk are these,
They scorn the lowly Babbits and their hearts are overseas.
They turn their backs upon us, and if we ask them why
They smile like jesting Pilate, and they stay for no reply;
They smile at faith and honor, and they smile at shame and crime.
But the old Palo Pinto man is calling for his time.

For he heard old voices and he heard hoofs beat,
Songs that long ago were gay to time with drumming feet:
Bent back straightens and dim eyes grow bright—
The last man on horseback rides on into the night!

Cossack and Saracen
Shout their wild welcome then,
Ragged proud Conquistadores claim him kind and kin,
And the wild Beggars of the Sea leap up to swell the din.
And Hector leans upon the wall, and David bends to scan
This new brown comrade from the old brown clan.
The great-hearted gentlemen who guard the outer wall,
Black with sin and stained with blood—and to fight through it all.
Still wearing for all ornament the scars they won below—
And the Lord God of Out-of-Doors. He cannot let them go, the hired horseman beyond the outer gate.

They have halted the hired horseman beyond the outer gate.
But the gentlemen adventurers cry shame that he should wait.
And the sour saints soften with a puzzled grin
As Esau and Ishmael press to let their brother and his head held high.
Hat tipped and eyes that pass by—
Gray hair snarled and his lips a-quick—
To the Master of the Workmen, with the taliv of his work!

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

Only NINE shopping days until Christmas! Which brings the Christmas spirit right up to our front door. Christmas is that time of year when the average persons get a lot of things they don't want... and give away a lot of things they received last year to others... also who don't want them.
Now if Sandy Claws would bring what we want, this scribe would ask for a vacation in Florida and we would hunt up our old friend E. S. D. Kahrs at Clearwater and go fishing! That would be what we call a CHRISTMAS present! We've got big feet but our socks ain't that big... so Sandy will probably pass it up. The best we can hope for is some fishing tackle for next spring.

I-S-A-S
The morning mail contained a contribution to the "Ink Spots," the sender, however, neglected to attach his name but it looks like it was run off on a typewriter in an office at the west end of Main street. We don't usually publish unsigned contributions... but this is along the Christmas spirit, so here 'tis:

MERRY CHRISTMAS
I'm sending this note to tell you That the New Deal has taken away The things that I really needed— My workshop, my reindeer, my sleigh.
Now I'm making my rounds on a donkey
He's old and crippled and slow,
So you'll know if I don't see you Christmas
I'm out on my ass in the snow.
Santa Claus.

I-S-A-S
Only 16 days to start swearing off on a lot of things for 1939! Now is a good time to prepare your list of resolutions... so you can start breaking them early.

There's nothing quite like a New Year's resolution broken early!

I-S-A-S
Money talks... or does it? Remember, a short time ago Bob Feller, Iowa's contribution to the Cleveland Indian's pitching staff, the school-boy wonder who had all the baseball fans standing on their ears? Remember Bob was arrested a short time ago for speeding through Ankeny, a small town near Des Moines. at 87 miles per hour? Remember, Bob was fined $100 for reckless driving and his driver's license was taken from him for 90 days? The other day Bob's license was returned to him... you figure it out!

I-S-A-S
So far, this scribe has failed to find one single item in any paper: complimenting Earl B. Miller for his action in firing the head officers in the State Patrol system Miller is "getting the axe" from every paper in the state, Republican and Democratic alike. The opinion of the Iowa Press seems to be universal in keeping the patrol system out of politics. All indications at present point toward legislative action at an early date to put the highway patrol definitely on a merit basis. Miller's neck should be very red after the trouncing he has received editorially throughout Iowa the past couple of weeks.

KLEMME SHAMROCKS SPLIT WITH VENTURA IN DOUBLE HEADER HERE
Little Shamrocks Add Victory, For Perfect Record Of Four Straight Wins

The Klemme Shamrocks won one and lost one basketball game here Monday night with Ventura. The Little Shamrocks maintained a perfect record by beating the visiting reserves 17 to 16. Buseman led the attack for the locals by dumping in three field goals. K Stille, Gibbs, L. Stille, Brinkman Buseman, Zabalka and Trees all saw service for the Little Shamrocks.

Shamrocks Take Loss
The Shamrocks dropped their third defeat of the season to the Ventura high school in a rather ragged game which ended 29 to 22 for the visitors.
Getting off to a poor start the Shamrocks were held scoreless the first quarter as the Lakers chalked up two field goals and a gift shot for five points. At the half the Shamrocks trailed 3 to 10 and were ten points behind at the end of the third quarter, 8 to 18. A spurt in the last quarter brought them up to 22 while the Lakers stretched their lead to 29 as the game ended.

Grosshuesch lead the field for Klemme with 4 field goals and 2 free throws for 10 points. Barz, who was a sensation against Kanawha failed to hit the hoop but won two free chances. Kluckhohn dumped in two goals and three free chances for a perfect record, and Grange shot a goal and a free one. Katter and Wicks failed to score.

Crystal Lake Next
The Shamrocks journey to Crystal Lake, Thursday evening for a conference tilt.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Wastes
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. If kidneys sometimes lag in their work, not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffing under the eyes—a feeling of nerve anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

LEMMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—The other day, a dapper little old man in a big Wall street banking office and asked for the top boss, with an air of assurance. He had an audience and came out and stepping high.

friend, who was doing business there that day, reports to that the peppy visitor was General Motors, once the owner of $100,000,000, and that, the age of 77, Mr. Durant was turning new capital for another journey in motor finance.

friend couldn't learn whether he got it, but said he had heard there was a deal on which Mr. Durant on the line again. He said the little Napoleon of early day auto looked as if he were about to merge all companies in the cream.

was in 1910 that the bankers pulled Mr. Durant out of the presidency of General Motors. He was in 1915 and out again in 1920, the post-war crash, in which he lost $90,000,000 of his own money, trying to stop the downward slide of the stock. He took his losses and was busy for years in the market forays, but never converted any of his passes.

acquaintance of this writer, knew Mr. Durant well, told me he laughed off his second re-entrance of his motor kingdom.

"I built the greatest automobile building in the world, at Detroit," he said, according to my informant, "and when I did I fixed it so they won't soon forget me. Hidden somewhere every column and every capital and big stack of that building there is a deeply chiseled D. There wasn't anything anonymous about that job, and I took care to leave my mark on it."

did the king in Kipling's poem, as he was pulled off his big palatial building job, when "They said use is fulfilled." He "Carved every timber and cut on every stone," and the poem concludes, "Let me cometh a builder; tell me, too, have known."

OR several years, Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and one of the nation's greatest scientists, has explored the no man's land between an expanding government and an expanding government and an expanding technology. He thinks they ought to get together but he is no advocate of bureaucracy or extreme centralization. He doesn't like the idea of the government getting on the neck. He thinks the government, with its vast resources, ought to be an invaluable collaborator in science, and should be, in fact, the advances this idea warily, he finds creativeness and social progress in the old American free-wheel, without elaborate governmental trappings.

He never claimed an ivory tower, and sees the problem in the simple social components of life, a rising standard of living, social progress and security. He sees the job-killing potentialities of the machine, in certain individual instances, and assesses industrial management with finding a corrective.

his qualified admission is in contrast to the view of Dr. Albert Andrews Millikan, another distinguished scientist who has wrestled with the same problem. Dr. Millikan is for throwing the wide open, with the certainty that machines ultimately will do more jobs than they destroy. He, however, prescribe as a cure for our technological ills more of the dog that bit us. The difference in view is that Dr. Compton urges certain collective organizations and judicious self-controls by industry and management.

For many years Dr. Compton has been blasting at the inner hidden golden key of unlimited power which has long been "pie in the sky" of the great physicists. He batters down a comparison now and then, and in the long view of the scientists, thinks that we may some day tap reservoirs of energy so vast that all our present ills will be easily soluble therein.

He has headed M. I. T. since 1930, rounding 50. He was head of department of physics at Princeton before 1930, one of the most garlanded men of his profession, honors and records of achievement.

Lesson for December 18

CHRIST'S NEW COMMANDMENT

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:43-48; 22:34-40, John 13:34, 35; 15:12-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.—John 13:34.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education, used by permission.

The heart of all moral law is found in the Ten Commandments, but the very heart of the commandments is the "new commandment" of Christ, that we love God with our whole being and love our neighbors as ourselves. For if we have that perfect devotion to God we shall keep His commandments (John 15:9, 10), and shall show our love to our neighbors by positive acts of interest and devotion, as well as by refraining from falsehood, violence and impurity.

The message of our lesson today is one which will strike home to the hearts of honest and earnest men and women. When we stand in the revealing light of God's Holy Word we cry out for forgiveness for the manner in which we have failed truly to represent our Lord in the world, and in prayer for grace to live as we should. Let no unbeliever who reads these words use them as a basis for criticism of his Christian neighbor; but let him consider his own need of the regenerating and enabling grace of God.

Our outline for today we borrow with thanks from Points for Emphasis, by Dr. Hight C. Moore. It so aptly presents the truth that it merits our study.

I. Standard of the New Commandment (Matt. 5:43-48).

"Love your enemies" (v. 44), that is the standard which Christ has established for His followers. While the love one has for the brethren is without doubt a more intimate relationship than the love one may have for an enemy, we must not seek to minimize the real love we should have even for those who curse and revile us. It is to move us so deeply that we not only treat them kindly, but also pray for them. Humanly speaking such a thing is impossible, but in Christ it is not only possible, it has actually been demonstrated in life. It is so easy for Christians to speak with derision that borders on hatred about "the devil's gang," to lose all love for the crowd that hangs around the tavern and the gambling house. Let us hate their sin, but may God help us to show that we really love them.

II. Scope of the New Commandment (Matt. 22:34-40).

It is as high as God, as deep as the lowest sinner, and as wide as the circle of all mankind.

A man must be right with God if he is truly and fully to love his fellow men. To be right with Him does not mean a half-hearted one-day-a-week interest in religious matters, and that only up to the point where they do not interfere with our own interests and desires. To love God means to give Him the devotion of our entire being.

Loving one's neighbors does not just mean the man next door. Even that is none too easy at times; and some of us realize that we have failed even there. But the man in Sweden, China, Germany, anywhere on this earth, is our neighbor and needs our love. There are no "foreigners" in God's thinking about love; no poor or rich, no ignorant, no members of "another social order"—they are all our neighbors.

III. Spirit of the New Commandment (John 13:34, 35).

"As I have loved you"—that is the spirit that is to move us to love our neighbor. God is love, and it was always His will that men should love one another. But the new element in this commandment of Christ is that He, the final and perfect revelation of God's love, had come to give His life in loving service and sacrificial atonement. Paul caught the spirit of this commandment when he said, "The love of Christ constraineth us" (II Cor. 5:14). There is the real motive, the true spirit of Christian life and service.

IV. Sacrifice in the New Commandment (John 15:12-14).

Love draws no limiting line beyond which it will not go. Love says: "I count not my life dear if in giving it I may bring deliverance to my friends."

Some folk talk piously of their love for God, but are not willing to go even across the street to speak to a soul about Him. If we love Him we would willingly go to the ends of the earth for Him, or contentedly serve Him in what seems to be a forgotten corner. We shall not question His guidance nor blush to own His name, even though the testimony may mean our death. This we shall do for Christ's sake and for the sake of a suffering humanity.

The writer thinks of John and Betty Stam whom he was privileged to teach in the classrooms of the Moody Bible Institute, and who not long afterward poured out their lives in martyrdom for Christ in China. "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Homemade dolls for collectors.

THIS Christmas it is not just the children who will receive dolls as gifts. Doll collecting is becoming a popular hobby for grown-ups. The most valued dolls are of whatever materials may be at hand and reflect the individuality of the person who made them. Rag babies of all kinds have an important place in such a collection. You will enjoy making the one shown here. Book 2 offered herewith also offers many suggestions for making and dressing dolls from scraps of materials.

If you want to make the stocking doll, clip these directions and keep them as this doll is not in either of the books offered here. The head and body are made of the foot of the stocking cut off where the heel begins, as shown. Stuff this part with cotton or bits of soft clean rags, sew across the bottom and then wind a thread around so that the toes of the stocking will form the head. Fold the leg and arm pieces lengthwise, stitch, turn and then stuff. Wrap thread around to make divisions for hands and feet. Sew the legs to the body, then add the skirt. The arms are sewn on top of the sweater piece and the sweater collar is turned down over this sewing.

Largest Lake Once Farm

Underneath North Carolina's largest lake lies what was once the state's largest farm. Lake Mattamuskeet was pumped dry in a gigantic reclamation project and crops planted, but after spending $17,000,000 in an attempt to keep the sea out, the farm was abandoned to the water and it is now completely submerged again.

The largest water pumping system in the world failed its task. The lake is shallow, ranging from one to six feet deep.

has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—Sewing for the Home Decorator is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful Christmas gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Crazypatch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Order by number. 25 cents each book. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplantes St., Chicago, Ill.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

Oversized Sheets.—Because some sheets shrink five to ten inches, it is better to buy those considerably wider than the mattress on which they are to be used.

Tips on Gluing.—The wood must be dry and free from oil, paint or other coatings that fill its surface pores. Joint surfaces must fit together smoothly, without "hills and valleys." Always sand and brush dust off surfaces to be glued. Spread glue over both surfaces as a thin film—never thickly.

Heat Tea Leaves.—Tea tastes better and goes much further if, when you open a new packet, you spread the tea on a sheet of clean paper and place it in an oven that is just warm for about ten minutes.

More Desirable.—If you cannot afford a good wood when buying furniture, it is wise to keep to the painted sort. The painted furniture gives a dainty and colorful appearance that is more to be desired than cheaper grades of stained wood.

Wise and Otherwise

Walkers are saying that a pedestrian crossing is a dash between two dotted lines.

You never can tell. Many a half-baked millionaire has more crust than dough.

"What's wrong with the girl of today?" asks a poster. Perhaps that she wasn't born yesterday.

Miracles do happen nowadays. Recently a pedestrian died of old age.

Even Solomon with a thousand wives must have wondered at times if he wouldn't have been happier if he had married somebody else.

Sea-Going 'Ducks'

Straight across the Pacific from China an American doctor sailed a tiny junk recently. The trip took 85 days and would have been fine, he said, except for whales and fog. Fog kept him from taking observations. Whales, twice as long as the junk, threatened to overturn it!

Few people would undertake so long a voyage in a junk, though the high-decked craft is eminently seaworthy.

When Yankee and British seamen first visited the Orient in great numbers, they were charged to find junks safely riding out typhoons that dismantled their larger ships. Even today, the little junks, like so many ducks, plunge unharmed up and down waves that damage modern steamers. Primarily river and canal boats, junks are homes to many Chinese.

But they have previously proved themselves capable of weathering stiffer tests. The American doctor was not the first man to sail one across the Pacific.—Washington Post.

NEVER SLEEP ON AN "UPSET" STOMACH

Neutralize excess stomach acids to wake up feeling like a million

To relieve the effects of over-indulgence—escape "acid indigestion" next day—do this: Take 2 tablespoonfuls of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water—AT BEDTIME.

While you sleep, this wonderful alkaliizer will be sweetening your stomach... easing the upset-feeling and nausea... helping to bring back a "normal" feeling. By morning you feel great.

Then—when you wake—take 2 more tablespoonfuls of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia with orange juice.

That is one of the quickest, simplest, easiest ways to overcome the bad effects of too much eating, smoking or drinking. Thousands use it.

But—never ask for "milk of magnesia" alone—always ask for "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer Honored On Golden Wedding Anniversary

HE SPENT FIFTY YEARS OF MARRIED LIFE TOGETHER

Guests Gathered And Surprised
Them On Anniversary Day

Tuesday, Dec. 20th, Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary. Their children planned and prepared a surprise dinner in their home to them as they never expected any one to remember their wedding day. They had not planned to observe the day in any special way.

A goose dinner was enjoyed by the guests. The table was beautifully decorated with candles and a large wedding cake, artistically decorated by their grand daughter, Emory Weaver. A lovely pot of Chrysanthemum given to them by their grand daughter, Miss Vel Schaefer, also added to the decorations.

After the bounteous dinner a program was enjoyed. Several talks were given and Mr. Schaefer played some of his original songs. They had a surprise card and letter read on them. These cards were sent to them from relatives and friends from all parts of the United States.

An announcement was made of the anniversary over KGLO news and a song was dedicated to them in the afternoon.

There were nearly fifty relatives in attendance, including one great grandson. All the immediate relatives were present but a grand son, Mr. Schaefer who was unable to attend on account of a recent accident.

A rug was given the honored couple as well as a purse of money. The following poems written by Mr. Schaefer's two brothers, Mr. A. Suckow of Unionville and Mr. Will Suckow of Alden were read and dedicated to them:

E. J. Schaefer

Eighteen hundred and eighty-eight,

Ed and Ed each wanted a mate,

They got the license and a parson as well,

And bade single blessedness a long farewell.

They lived on a farm and tilled the soil,

Where they spent many years of toil.

Now they need rest for body and mind,

But rest is elusive, it's hard to find.

Their hair was black as the wing of the crow,

Now it is more like the driven snow.

But their conscience is clear as in days of old,

They labored and paid for all they hold.

After fifty years of life together,

Shine and clouds, all kinds of weather,

By the years they have left be bright and fair.

May God's blessing rest on this noble pair.

You've sailed the matrimonial seas
For fifty years,
Through stormy times and days of ease,
Mid hopes and fears.

May your remaining voyage be Serene and fair,
Until the harbor lights you see
And anchor there.

ATTENTION HOG PRODUCERS

Widespread interest prevails among thousands of hog producers in the middlewestern states over the organization of a nation-wide movement, the National Farmers Process Tax Recovery Association, which is waging an aggressive fight to obtain legislation for the refunding of processing taxes to hog producers.

The entire movement is premised upon the following indisputable facts which are readily admitted by officials of the Government as establishing the right of hog producers to be refunded the amount of taxes paid: The processing tax on hogs was held illegal because the act under which the tax was collected was found unconstitutional; the burden of the tax was born by the producer because the amount of the tax was deducted from the price of his hogs; Congress has already established a precedent for refunding in its Revenue Act of 1936, by making it possible for processors and packers to recover such tax as they bore the burden of and paid; the hog producers paid the processing tax and they are fully and wholly within their rights in seeking to have it returned to them, inasmuch as it came from their pockets in the first place.

The taxing period under the invalidated AAA began on November 5, 1933, and ended January 6, 1936, both dates inclusive. The processing tax on hogs from November 5, 1933, to December 1, 1933, was 50c cwt.; from December 1, 1933, to February 1, 1934, $1.00 cwt.; from February 1, 1934, to March 1, 1934, $1.50 cwt.; and from March 1, 1934, through January 6, 1936, $2.25 cwt.

Farmers who produced and sold hogs during the period from November 5, 1933, to January 6, 1936, and who are interested in the process tax recovery movement, may contact Louis Griffen, Garner, Iowa and Silvanus Wacker, Garner, Iowa, authorized representatives of the National Farmers Process Tax Recovery Association for Hancock County.

It is very important that all claims should be completed and filed by January 1, 1939.

They have lost only one conference game—that to Woden—and have won three, defeating two of the strong teams in the conference, Kanawha and Crystal Lake.

Down Crystal Lake

Thursday night the Shamrocks downed the speedy Crystal Lake quintet on the C L floor by a score of 23 to 20. They jumped into an early lead and held it throughout the game. Crystal Lake put on a strong rally in the closing period but was not quite able to overcome the 10 point lead the Shamrocks held at the close of the third quarter.

Scoring was well spread for Klemme with Grosshuesch and Barz getting 8 and 7 points, respectively, and Kluckhohn and Katter 4 apiece.

Murray was the big gun for Crystal Lake, getting 7 of his teams 20 points, while every other man used on the Lake team scored one goal. Finer also scored a free throw.

Little Shamrocks Win

The Little Shamrocks, although trailing 13 to 5 at the half, came back strong and led by Brunkman and L. Stille with 9 points apiece, defeated the Crystal Lake reserves 26 to 19. It was the Little Shamrocks' fifth consecutive win this season.

Trounce Hayfield

Monday night on the local floor the Shamrocks trounced Hayfield 36 to 16 for their third victory in six starts.

Playing without the services of Kluckhohn, regular guard, the Shamrocks dug in and practically swamped the Hayfield five. Coach Kingerly used ten men in the game and all but three of them scored.

Grosshuesch was the main point-getter for the Shamrocks, scoring 15 points, while Barz was next on the list with 8.

Sowder and Nelson stood out for Hayfield with 7 and 6 points, respectively.

Junior High Wins

Playing the Hayfield Junior High the local Junior High team, led by Grosshuesch with 18 points, ran wild to outscore their opponents 32 to 23 in the curtain raiser Monday night. Leitzinger looked best for Hayfield with 7 points.

LOCAL COUPLE IN FLORIDA
FOR THE WINTER MONTHS

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Patet Saw Many Things Of Interest

Tampa, Florida,
December 9, 1938

Dear Friends,

We started at Klemme, Wednesday, Nov. 30, in the afternoon and left for Walker, Iowa, and stayed there that night. Left for Cedar Rapids to Davenport Thursday and spent part of the day there. We saw what they call "Little Bit of Heaven" which we enjoyed very much. Just a little different than we had seen before.

We went on to Galesburg, Ill., and stayed all night in a cabin which was very nice. It was heated, had bath, kitchenette, nice clean bed, and everything you wanted.

We left there Friday morning for Peoria. We had dinner in Tuscola in the afternoon it rained and it rained Saturday forenoon. We drove all through the rain but took our time.

Indiana is a very rough state—has lots of hills and trees. You find a good many small houses. Through Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia you find many colored people. They are satisfied in any kind of a building. Sure take no pride in their homes. No homes have any paint and barns almost falling over.

We saw mules all along the way. People work with one mule hitched to the plow. That's the way they cultivate their ground. One mule hitched to a wagon and two or three people in the wagon going to town. Lots of people walk. We only saw 3 or 4 windmills from Indiana to Florida. They have wells and they draw the water from them with wooden buckets tied to ropes. That's the way my grandfather used to do.

If you like scenery this is the place to go. Pine and cedar trees all the way. Also lots of hills and mountains. We drove in the mountains for a half a day.

We stayed one night in each state and had very nice places to stay. They have cabins of all kinds. Some are made of brick, some stone, some frame, and some log cabins all fixed up very nice. Most of these are run by white people, although a few are run by colored folks.

Chattanooga is a nice place and very large—120,000. Atlanta, Georgia, also is very large. Chattanooga is very hilly and I asked how people made a living. They say they have over 500 factories and that's where they work.

We saw several cemeteries, one where vaults were on top of the ground and one where each lot was all walled up with bricks. Also we saw burial grounds for old soldiers with every marker alike.

They have very few cattle and what they do have are poor. We at home wouldn't own them. They have just a few chickens. About a dozen is all they keep. A few sheep are raised and in one place we saw 25 goats. We saw some cotton.

They sell lots of chenille, hand-made candlewicks, bedspreads, aprons and novelties hung out in the yards along the way. They have rail and board fences all the way to Florida. Florida has the open range. Cattle and hogs run where they please. If you run over them you pay for them.

It is quite warm and nice here—not hot and it don't freeze.

In Georgia pecans sell all along the way. Also there are many fruit markets.

We stopped at a Turpentine Still and a guide explained things to us. He showed us the trees and told us how it was made. One man owned

SANTA CLAUS VISITED THE WALT THADA STORE SAT'Y

A huge crowd of youngsters were present Saturday afternoon to greet Santa Claus when he appeared at the Walt Thada Store.

Mr. Thada reports that Santa did a land office business passing out treats to the kiddies and that nearly five hundred boys and girls were present to see Santa Claus.

So large was the crowd that business had to be suspended at the store until after Santa Claus had treated all the kids and the crowd thinned down so that customers could again be waited on.

Weekly News Analysis

Italy Follows Hitler Technique
To Trounce Weakened France

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

France

In his widely quoted "Mein Kampf," Adolf Hitler avers that once a nation shows signs of weakening, its enemies should seize the opportunity to press every demand. This year he has followed that policy successfully in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Great Britain and France. Now his Fascist cohort, Italy, is using the same tactics against France.

First French capitulation to Italy was the recent recognition of Mussolini's conquest in Ethiopia. This was followed closely by French internal strife, when the radical Popular Front attempted to defeat Premier Edouard Daladier's drastic reform program. In the midst of this turmoil, it was strategic for Italy's chamber of deputies to launch a tumultuous campaign for three French possessions which Mussolini covets: the African territory of Tunisia, the island of Corsica and the Franco-Italian border city of Nice. Later came a rebirth of demands for French-owned Djibouti, which would give Ethiopia an ocean outlet.

FRANCE'S AFRICAN TUNISIA
One concession invites another.

France's answer has been a firm negative, but this can hardly be construed as final. There is every indication that the Djibouti claim will be granted, since France was ready to make this surrender last summer. What complicates the situation is the "friendship" pact which France's ally—Great Britain—has just instituted with Italy. Although this treaty respects a territorial status quo in the Mediterranean, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain is going to Rome next month with an apparent blank check to appease Mussolini as he sees fit. If Mr. Chamberlain approves Italy's new demands, France will be left helpless.

Only hope in an otherwise befuddled situation is that Germany may break with Italy. After helping Hitler reach into the European grab bag for new territories, Italy is beginning to wonder where her share is coming from. But Germany, happy over her new non-aggression treaty with France, may ask Mussolini to look elsewhere for new colonies. The new crisis certainly proves no more than what sane observers have maintained since last spring: that France and Britain merely whet the Italo-German appetite each time they offer a concession.

Domestic

Last spring the New York legislature passed a bill which potentially effects every citizen in the U. S. Reducing from 6 to 5 per cent the interest which life insurance companies may charge on policy loans, the Piper-O'Brien bill has necessitated nationwide revision of interest rates because insurance companies cannot charge different rates in different states.

Upshot is that most companies are boosting their premium charges from 10 to 20 per cent on policies written after January 1, although many firms made the change December 1. Policies in effect before the readjustment will not be affected, but in addition to lower interest rate and higher premiums, the following additional revisions will be made on most new policies: (1) reduction of guaranteed interest rates to beneficiaries; (2) lower interest rates on dividends left with companies; (3) increased premiums on endowment annuity policies; (4) withdrawal or substantial change in certain types of contracts.

By reducing policy loan interest charges from 6 to 5 per cent, insurance firms will lose annual revenue totaling $50,000,000. Other factors necessitating higher premiums include the difficulty of finding satisfactory capital markets, and the small amount of new financing now being done.

Business

Until this year, depression-ridden U. S. did not bother to ask why the nation's economic cylinders had grown rusty. Government and business alike were more interested in oiling the machinery than in replacing or adjusting misfit cogs. Moreover, both worked from different directions: government thought the cure rested in greater U. S. regulation; business thought it rested in less regulation. Not until last year, when an unexpected recession slapped convalescing industry in the face, did both government and business decide it was time to face the problem with less bias and more objectivity. By the end of 1938 this new attitude is finding expression at Washington and on the U. S. business front, though mutual agreement is still far from realization.

Washington: Government's efforts currently center around the $500,000 temporary national economic committee, which has just opened a two-year hearing under Wyoming's Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney. Though business has feared the quiz will degenerate into a "witch hunt" and anti-monopoly drive (since the justice department's trust buster, Thurman Arnold, is a committee member) Mr. O'Mahoney has given assurances that his group seeks only "economic facts."

"Facts" presented thus far, by the labor department's Dr. Isador Lubin and one-time WPA Economist Leon Henderson, purportedly merely to give a background but ended with expressions of opinion which failed to harmonize.

Dr. Lubin's report: That the 1929-38 depression cost the U. S. $113,000,000,000 in national income, plus $119,000,000,000 in wages, $20,000,000,000 in stockholder dividends, $38,000,000,000 in farm income and 43,435,000 in man hours of work. Though industry can be stepped up to meet consumer demand, it is more important to improve the standard of living, since U. S. population is reaching a stationary stage. Durable goods industries should be stimulated to boost the average income by $750 per year.

Mr. Henderson's report: Growth of U. S. economic activity has been halted, and even a return to 1929's peak (which Mr. Henderson believes should be regarded as a low base, not a peak) would leave 7,000,000 unemployed. Unlike Dr. Lubin, who believes insufficient purchasing power is the cause of our ills, Mr. Henderson places responsibility on lessening of competition. True competition, he believes, could not allow wage increases at a time when millions are unemployed.

Even as Messrs Lubin and Henderson were speaking, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles of the federal reserve system was offering New York bankers another U. S. idea on business. One reason for 1937's setback, he said, was a sharp withdrawal of government spending, which throttled consumer buying power. Plumping for looser credit restrictions by banks, Mr. Eccles hinted that their failure to follow this plan would result in government credit agencies. Summing up statements by Lubin, Henderson and Eccles, observers saw that government's efforts for business revival are still far from clear.

Business: More tangible and optimistic is the reform program of U. S. industry, heartened by the current economic upturn and willing to make peace with government. Meeting in New York, the National Association of Manufacturers keynoted for "co-operation—to make America click." Its points: (1) peace with labor; (2) acceptance of social responsibility; (3) acceptance of regulation, in general theory; (4) end unemployment; (5) please the consumer with higher quality, lower costs and public-minded policies.

Business' requests to government: (1) Wagner act modification; (2) limitation of armament expenditures to avert unnecessary diversion of funds; (3) no encouragement of foreign trade at cost to domestic industry.

People

The name of Masaryk, famous in Czechoslovakian history since Thomas G. Masaryk founded the nation 20 years ago, will leave that nation's officialdom forever on January 1. Jan Masaryk, son of the Czech "father" and minister to Great Britain for 14 years, has announced his retirement in protest to his country's capitulation to Germany.

Agriculture

A natural result of the U. S.-British reciprocal trade agreement is that some domestic industries will gain, others lose. The theory is that gains offset losses, working to our national benefit. First tests of this policy now loom as a result of the federal surplus commodity corporation's sale of 20,000,000 bushels in American wheat to British flour manufacturers.

Until now, the corporation has subsidized both flour and wheat exports, but British millers think this is unfair in view of England's agreement to remove its six-cent tariff on American wheat. Consequently a stipulation in the 20,000,000-bushel sale is that F. S. C. C. subsidy on flour exported to Great Britain (currently $1.05 a barrel) be removed. Thus U. S. wheat sales to Britain will be facilitated, but flour manufacturers will lose an export market.

The British sale is by far the most important transaction yet made in Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace's program to subsidize 100,000,000 bushels of export wheat this fiscal year. By early December this program had netted sales of 63,000,000 bushels, of which F. S. C. C. had purchased 28,420,000 bushels by November 15. Of this, 19,000,000 bushels had been sold abroad at an average loss to the corporation of 12½ cents. The British transaction alone will cost F. S. C. C. about $5,000,000.

What will happen to the U. S. wheat situation between now and next spring is anybody's guess. Even though the export program is carried out completely, a 250,000,000-bushel surplus will still face farmers when they start harvesting next year's crop. Latest in a series of suggested panaceas is that of Dr. Merrill K. Bennett, economist of the Stanford university food research institute, who wants the U. S. to place a floor—somewhere between 55 and 70 cents—under which wheat prices could not fall. Next year, he predicts, "the world may be literally swamped with surplus wheat."

White House

President Roosevelt's critics have charged him with creating the current rearmament campaign to make the public forget his defeat in November's election. Although the multi-billion rearmament program has been advertised as a quick way to put men back to work and stimulate business, critics further allege that it is simply a form of pump-priming. If so, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce has complained that rearmament is a cumbersome and slow process, poorly adapted to pump-priming.

Seeking reasons for the outlay, questioning legislators want to know if a $350,000,000 increase in next year's arms appropriation (the first in a proposed five-year series) is justified by world conditions. Another important question is who will handle the money, army-navy officials or political appointees. A third: how much of the money would be spent for defense of the immediate U. S. area, and how much for other parts of the Western hemisphere?

Idaho's sagacious Sen. William E. Borah is one of few legislators thus far to comment on the bill. His opinion: "If this huge armament trend continues, the people are going to demand a voice in the matter of going to war."

This statement once again shifts the spotlight on Indiana's Rep. Louis Ludlow, whose constitutional amendment calling for a referendum on offensive warfare was defeated by the last congress. Having won reelection last month in a campaign based on this issue alone, Mr. Ludlow plans to re-introduce his measure before the next congress.

Politics

It is plausible that November election gains by the liberalized Republican party should give strength to old-line Republicans who have taken a back seat in party affairs since the disastrous defeat of 1936. This very thing happened at the recent national committee conference in Washington, where confident liberals found themselves confronted with an unexpectedly strong faction of Hoover, duPont and Liberty league Republicans. A still more important shift is that liberal G. O. P. strength, which originated in the rural areas, has moved to metropolitan cities and has been supplanted in the small towns by a stronger conservative element. Having appointed a conservative (ex-Sen. Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware) and a liberal (Harvey Jewett of South Dakota) to fill two executive committee vacancies, the party now finds itself deadlocked on a future course. Though much talk is heard of potential 1940 candidates, it is believed the party must first decide which way its course shall be set—to liberalism or conservatism.

Religion

Most seekers-after-justice for Germany's beleaguered Jews, even the official intergovernmental committee now meeting in London, have made only slight effort to secure personal contact with the No. 1 enemy of Jews, Adolf Hitler. The only move in this direction was made by George Rublee, American member of the intergovernmental committee, who will not visit Hitler without an official invitation. But from New York recently sailed three Pennsylvania Quakers, who announced they hoped "to see Chancellor Hitler himself and take up the whole problem."

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Counsels Wise Eating
During the Holiday Season

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THE advent of the holiday season marks the beginning of one of the most difficult periods of the entire year for the homemaker.

To begin with, she is busied with the hundred and one details of Christmas shopping, the planning of holiday entertainments . . . and the preparation of extra food for parties. Secondly, the health and comfort of every member of the family depend to a considerable degree upon how they eat and what foods she serves during the weeks between now and January first.

Guard Against Lowered Resistance

Unfortunately, statistics show that the common cold and other similar ailments greatly increase in number directly after the first of the year. That is also the period when we find more people suffering from fatigue than at any other season. Both conditions are frequently traceable to faulty habits of eating and faulty hygiene during the holiday season.

The person who is forewarned is usually forearmed. Therefore, every homemaker who has the interests of her family at heart should plan, now, to arrange activities so that strain and fatigue will be reduced to a minimum. And more specifically, she should see to it that she formulates a sound eating program. Far too many people, at this season of the year, suffer the ill effects of lowered resistance brought about by unwise eating and by overeating.

Overeating of a poorly chosen diet is inadvisable at any time because it tends to overburden the digestive system. But it is particularly undesirable during the winter season when almost everyone tends to stay too long indoors, frequently in overheated rooms, and to take too little outdoor exercise.

Regularity in eating a carefully balanced diet, containing sufficient bulky foods to help promote regular health habits, is of the utmost importance if resistance is to be maintained at a high peak during the holiday season.

Keeping Body Machinery Efficient

One should always remember that the body is a machine working as regularly and as accurately as a clock. Any good mechanic knows that a fine mechanism requires the same type of care day in and day out. Homemakers, too, should remember that the body does not function differently just because we celebrate a holiday with age-old customs. Thus, to keep every member of the family well and rested, try not to allow the holiday celebrations to upset the ordinary routine of your household.

Late breakfasts, heavy dinners, and suppers taken at odd hours do not constitute the best possible menu-planning. The unfortunate over-emphasis on rich foods on special occasions may easily result in digestive disturbance, unless great care is taken to avoid dietetic indiscretions, and to maintain always the ideal of a balanced ration.

Child's Diet Especially Important

During the dark days of December, the children's diet requires extra thought and care. Too close confinement indoors and the lack of sunshine may easily have an adverse effect upon the temper and vitality of young children. Then, too, the excitement of anticipating Christmas is bound to add to their general fatigue.

Children seldom complain of fatigue, which makes it all the more necessary for mothers to be on guard against, or to look for, the first intimation that it may exist. A child who is tired is very apt to be irritable. More than likely his appetite will be poor, and when he does eat, he may not be able to care properly for the food he takes. You may find, if you allow him to become overtired or feed him unaccustomed foods, that it will be a struggle to get him to bed, and even then he may not sleep soundly. And it is generally recognized that disturbed sleep, plus unwise eating, may have most unfortunate consequences.

The Ideal Holiday Diet

Holiday or no holiday, both children and adults should have at least two fruits daily, one of which should be a citrus fruit or tomatoes, to help provide adequate vitamin C; there should be two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the green, leafy variety; an egg daily, or at least three or four weekly; a source. If these goodies are given to children at the end of a well-balanced meal, and not in criminally between meals, they should not be the upset digestions that make Christmas a bughouse to some mothers instead of a joyous occasion it should be.

By following out these suggestions, you can help your family enjoy the holidays without regret. You will feel fit and your good health will be the basis of good cheer.

Questions Answered

Mrs. S. M. B.—Your letter was the first of a large number I received on the subject and I therefore answering you, though my reply is also directed to the others who have inquired concerning a recent announcement that cereals might be harmful to the teeth.

I have seen reports on this subject by two investigators and know that other investigators are now endeavoring to check the work. As soon as there is further progress to report, I shall be glad to comment.

In the meantime, I would hesitate to follow the advice leading nutritionists and give your children cereals, at least half which may well be served in the whole grain form.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK. — In the pre-war years, about the only sure-thing newspaper man who covered Europe was Henri S. De Blowitz, the Bohemian who became a Frenchman and scooped the world with the text of the treaty at the conference of Berlin, at the end of the Franco-Prussian war. Although he did this for the London Times, English journalists — distinctly that, rather than newspaper men — seemed to think it wasn't quite cricket and they went on wearing spats, carrying canes, and dodging leg-work. I remember citing to an English friend the De Blowitz book, published posthumously in 1903, in which he told how he got that beat on the treaty — an exciting newspaper yarn if there ever was one. "Bit of a rotter, don't you think?" said the Englishman.

After the war, the English correspondents started shaking a leg, but, with all this Chauvinism loose in the world, we may boast that it was the American lads who set the pace. One press association and a few of our newspapers sent over to the big war some news beagles who began retrieving stories right under the nose of the morning coat scribes. They've been getting better all the time, and one of the bell-ringers is Frank Smothers of the Chicago Daily News, the tenth correspondent to be bounced out of Italy for faithful reporting in the last year.

Mr. Smothers was a fast-stepping and fast-thinking reporter in Chicago for nine years before he went to the Orient, as correspondent for the Chicago Daily News and the Boston Transcript. He was close in when the Japanese made their first grab for China and pegged home some of the best stories from that beat. In Italy, he made a similar record.

A keen analyst, as well as news-getter, he is one of a number of American foreign correspondents who have told the story of world catastrophe faster and better than any others at any place or time. He grew up in Roseville, Ill., and finished at the University of Wisconsin, after two years at Northwestern. He is 37 years old.

GEORGE RUBLEE, 70 years old, is beset with a thousand plans for taking care of European political refugees, as he heads the American efforts in this humane undertaking. His fame rests upon his achievements as an international lawyer, of the firm of Covington, Burling & Rublee, of Washington. He was a strong supporter and ally of the late Robert La Follette.

Whenever they have had oil trouble anywhere in the Western hemisphere, they have sent for Mr. Rublee. He has straightened out snarls over oil rights in Colombia, Mexico and other countries. He was a friend and associate of the late Dwight W. Morrow and helped him settle a number of oil and banking arguments in Mexico.

He is a native of Madison, Wis., and an alumnus of the Harvard law school. He began the practice of law at Chicago.

THERE was a news story the other day about a thwarted artist, who came through and had a glorious revenge on his thwarters. The Fine Arts Substitutes association, in behalf of teachers flunked by the New York board of examiners, gives an exhibition by which the public is to judge whether the board bopped them unjustly. Among the exhibitors is Max Weber, distinguished artist, represented in the Metropolitan museum, who was among those flunked by the board. With his picture goes a note to the board in which Mr. Weber tells what he thinks of it and cites his success as "proof of their incompetence."

Mr. Weber, a native of Russia, here at the age of 10, was a modernist, so far out of bounds that the academicians would turn in a riot call whenever anybody mentioned his name. He has been marked up more by the critics probably than any other man in America.

The turn in Mr. Weber's fortunes came in 1925, when a discerning New York Sun critic, among others, piped him up as a thoroughly competent artist. His pictures sell. He has a nice home at Great Neck, Long Island.

"The Great and Joyful News of PEACE Between America and Great Britain Reached This City This Evening . . ."

THE PEACE OF GHENT, 1814, AND TRIUMPH OF AMERICA—This allegorical picture, drawn by William Plauton, engraved by Chataigner and published by P. Price Jr. of Philadelphia, was very popular throughout the United States after the end of the War of 1812. Its design is thus described: "Minerva represents the wisdom of the United States, Mercury her commerce, Hercules her force. Minerva dictates their conditions of peace, which Mercury presents to Britannia, and Hercules forces her to accept them. On the shield of Minerva are the names of those who signed the treaty; on the obelisk, those of the braves. On the other side America passes in triumph through the arch on her way to the Temple of Peace. She is attended by Victory, and followed by a numerous train. Several trophies are seen, and in the background are the ruins of the Capitol."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

ON CHRISTMAS Eve, 124 years ago, the English-speaking peoples of the world had good reason for singing "peace on earth, good will to men." Over in the ancient city of Ghent in southern Netherlands (now Belgium), eight men representing the United States of America and Great Britain were signing a treaty to end the two-year war which those two nations had been carrying on against each other.

It had been fought on sea and on the soil of the United States and her neighbor, Canada. It was the second war which these two nations had fought but it was destined to be the last. During the next century they kept the peace established between them at Ghent and symbolic of their lasting friendship is the 1,000-mile border line between Canada and the United States along which there is not a single fortification on either side. Not only have the two nations kept the peace with each other for more than 100 years but during that time they have fought side by side as allies in the greatest conflict the world has ever known.

A little over a month ago, they were parties to another treaty. On November 17, in the historic, mirrored East Room of the White House, where the ill-starred Kellogg-Briand anti-war pact was signed, five men—Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador to the United States; Arnold E. Overton, secretary of the British Board of Trade; Cordell Hull, American secretary of state; President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mackenzie King, prime minister of Canada, signed the trade agreements which link the three English-speaking democracies together as common foes of international trade barriers and align them against the totalitarian policy of "self-sufficiency."

The Treaty of Ghent was the delayed culmination of a chain of events which had started within three months after the war had officially begun: On June 18, 1812, President James Madison signed the bill, passed by congress, declaring war against Great Britain. At that time John Quincy Adams was American minister at the Russian court. When the news reached St. Petersburg, Czar Alexander expressed his regret to Adams that the two countries should be at war and began making efforts to bring about a peace.

He sent instructions to M. Daschkoff, his representative at Washington, to offer to the United States his friendly services in ending the war. President Madison had been eager for a peace if it could be secured on honorable terms. In Russia's offer he saw a way to bring that about. He immediately accepted Daschkoff's offer and appointed Albert Gallatin, secretary of the treasury, and Senator James A. Bayard of Delaware as envoys extraordinary, to act with Adams diplomatic situation in Europe which made it advisable for England to conclude a peace as quickly as possible, finally put an end to the wrangling. An agreement was reached on Christmas Eve and the treaty was signed.

The treaty was immediately taken to London by Mr. Baker, secretary to Lord Gambier and Mr. Carroll, one of the secretaries of the American commissioners. There it was ratified on December 28 by the Prince Regent and then sent to America by the same messengers. They sailed in the British sloop of war, Favorite, on January 2, 1815, and arrived in New York on the evening of February 11.

Christopher Hughes had left Ghent with a copy of the treaty at the same time as the other messengers, had proceeded to Texel and there embarked for America in negotiating a peace treaty with England at St. Petersburg.

The British government, however, refused to treat for peace under the auspices of Russia but offered to open negotiations in London, or in Gottenburg in Sweden. President Madison immediately accepted this proposal and chose the latter place for the meeting. A short time later the city of Ghent was substituted for Gottenburg.

There the American commissioners assembled in the summer of 1814. They were John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Albert Gallatin, Henry Clay of Kentucky, and Jonathan Russell. The secretary of the American commissioners was Christopher Hughes Jr., then our charge d'affaires at Stockholm.

The British commissioners were Lord Gambier, Henry Goulburn and William Adams. They arrived in Ghent in August and negotiations began immediately. But progress was slow for the British representatives had been instructed to make no concessions to the main demands of the Americans. Instead they were to try to gain as many concessions from them as possible.

This fact, combined with their arrogant attitude, irritated the Americans, who were suspicious of virtually every suggestion offered by the Britishers. Especially was this true of John Quincy Adams, head of the delegation. His irascibility increased as the conference dragged on and on, and only the tact and diplomacy of Albert Gallatin more than once saved the conference from ending with nothing accomplished.

After a deadlock that lasted for several weeks, there came from America the news of the British defeat at Plattsburgh. This strengthened the hands of the American commissioners and, combined with a change in the on the schooner Transit. This vessel arrived at Annapolis, Md., two days after the Favorite reached New York but Hughes was in Washington with his copy of the treaty before the ratified copy arrived.

News of the arrival of the Favorite in New York soon spread over the city. The publisher of the Mercantile Advertiser printed "extras"—slips of paper five by six inches in size—which bore these words:

PEACE

New York, Saturday Evening 9 O'Clock, February 11, 1815
The great and joyful news of PEACE between the United States and Great Britain reached this city this evening by the British sloop of war, Favorite, the Hon. J. U. Mowatt, Esq. commander, in forty-two days from Plymouth.

Henry Carroll, Esq. Secretary of the American Legation at Ghent, is the welcome bearer of the treaty, which was signed at Ghent on the 24th of December by the respective commissioners, and ratified by the British government on the 28th of December. Mr. Baker, late Secretary to the British Legation at Washington, has also arrived in the sloop of war with a copy of the treaty ratified by the British government.

These "extras" were thrown out of the windows of the newspaper office and eagerly caught up by the excited crowds who, in the words of a contemporary, "made the night vocal with huzzas."

There was rejoicing in England, too, and in both countries special medals were struck in commemoration of the great event. The English medal bore on one side the words "Treaty of Peace and Amity Between Great Britain and the United States of America, Signed at Ghent December 24, 1814." Upon the other side was a feminine figure standing upon the segment of a globe, bearing the cornucopia of plenty, and holding in one hand the olive branch of peace. Surrounding this figure were the words appropriate to the Christmas season—"On the Earth Peace, Good Will to Men."

Despite all the rejoicing in both England and America over the end of the war, it is noteworthy that there was dissatisfaction with the treaty in both countries. The English Tories and their newspapers condemned the treaty because it yielded too much to what they called the "insolent Yankees" and they continued to disparage the American people and the American republic.

Among some factions in this country the peace was regarded almost as unsatisfactory as the war had been. The anti-administration forces pointed out that the important issue of impressment of American seamen was not mentioned in the treaty and such problems as the long-standing dispute over boundaries, the Newfoundland fisheries and navigation of the Mississippi remained unsolved.

One of their newspapers, the New York Evening Post, in its "New Year's Address," had declared:

Your commerce is wantonly lost. Your treasures are wasted and gone; You've fought to no end, but with millions of cost.

And for rivers of blood you've nothing to boast.

But credit and nation undone. And when the terms of the treaty were made known the criticism in that stanza seemed abundantly justified.

Despite all the abuse that was heaped upon the treaty, and the men who made it, it was ratified by unanimous vote of the senate on February 17, 1815, and it was promulgated the next day by proclamation of President Madison. Although the American commissioners had not gained all that the administration had hoped they might, in the words of one historian, "far more important to this country and the world than the security of incidental advantages was the establishment, by the war, of the positive and permanent independence of the United States, and with it a guarantee to the posterities of the perpetuation and growth of free institutions. Great Britain had been taught, by the lessons of the war, that the young republic, the offspring of her oppressions, growing more lusty every hour, would no longer tolerate an insult, or suffer its sovereignty to be questioned without resenting the offense; and she was compelled to sign a bond, as it were, to keep the peace, in the form of an acknowledgment that she had, in that republic, a formidable rival for the supremacy of the seas, which she was bound to respect."

For America's victories on the sea had been impressive and for the first time in history the domination of the "Mistress of the Seas" had been successfully challenged. On land, however, the opposite had been true. With one or two exceptions our military operations had been bungling and more often resulted in defeat than in victory.

And then, like the proverbial bolt from the blue, came the news that an American general had won a victory over England's best troops. On January 8, 1815, Gen. Andrew Jackson with his motley army of Kentucky and Tennessee frontiersmen, Creoles, and Jean Lafitte's pirates, had smashed the army led by General Pakenham against New Orleans—an army composed of Wellington's veterans who had helped him win fame in the Peninsula war.

Forgotten now was the dissatisfaction over the treaty; forgotten were all the defeats and disasters which had overtaken our armies during the two years of the war. "Old Hickory" Jackson was the hero of the hour. "To a country that had almost completely lost faith in itself, to a country that had almost learned to cringe, this news came like a reprieve to a man on the gallows. It was literally crazed with joy, and in its delirium it flung the name of Andrew Jackson against the stars."

Christmas, 1814, may not have been a very happy one for most Americans. But Christmas, 1815, certainly was. Andrew Jackson had "saved the self-respect of the nation" early in the year. By the time Christmas came around a new national prosperity was already on the way and out of that prosperity and the peacetime readjustment of national affairs came eventually the "Era of Good Feeling" which distinguished the administration of Madison's successor, James Monroe.

Undie Set and Day Dress Easily Made

THE undie set goes so quickly and easily, in fact, that you can finish it for a gift in time for Christmas—and you'll certainly want to make it for yourself. The house frock is a diagram design that you can finish in a few hours.

The Undie Set.

Slip, panties and brassiere are all included in this one simple design that even the inexperienced can make with no difficulty. Make it up in fine quality materials—satin, crepe de Chine or flat crepe—and you'll save money not only in the first place, but in the long run, because the undies will wear and wash so long and so well. The slip has a beautifully fitted line over which your doll-waisted clothes will look their best. The brassiere provides support and uplift that you need for a definite bustline, and the panties are unusually smooth-hipped, because they fasten with a zipper.

The House Dress.

This full-skirted frock is such a pretty thing that you'll be wise to make it up in flannel or challis for shopping as well as in calico, gingham and percale for around the house. The bodice has darts just above the waist to create becoming fullness over the bust, the sleeves are puffed high at the shoulders, and the neckline, outlined with a double row of braid or ribbon, is extremely flattering.

No. 1649 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 16 requires, for the slip 2 3/4 yards of 39-inch material; for the panties, 1 1/2 yards; for the brassiere, 1/2 yard.

No. 1650 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35-inch material; 11 yards of ribbon or braid to trim.

CHRISTMAS DAY

"What day of the year do you like best?"
I asked a boy one day.
A boy most twelve with turned up nose
Who lived across the way.

With a heavy frown, then a tooth-ful grin
The lad was quick to say,
"Everyone in the whole world knows
You can't beat Christmas Day.

Sure, I had fun on the 4th of July
When everybody was gay;
But I bet I have a lot more fun
On good old Christmas Day?

Of course Thanksgiving Day was nice
I ate so much and remember How thankful I was that it wouldn't be long
Till the 25th of December?

I'm glad too when my birthday comes
'Cause there's always gifts for me;
But somehow they don't hold near the cheer
As those 'neath the Christmas tree.

And New Year's day is O. K. too
With good resolutions galore.
Still the thoughts we hold on Christmas Day
Are worth a whole lot more.

Yep, Christmas is the holiday!"
And the boy went on his way.
I need not say I too was convinced
There's none like Christmas Day.

So let's drink a toast to the day of days
With which each year is blest;
The day to be filled with the joy of giving
The day we all like best.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.
When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feet tired, nervous, all worn out.
Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.
The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

DOAN'S PILLS

Fragile Look Fostered by New Coiffure

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

ARTISTS and poets have raved about the lovely nape of a woman's neck since time began. It is supposed to be one of our most alluring feminine charms! And because fashion repeats itself, napes of necks are bare again, as those new and exciting, brush-the-hair-high coiffures are here for a long stay!

Such a hair-do is gloriously feminine. It has a way of making a woman or a girl more fragile. You know—looking as if she might not be able to take a severe scolding! And that's always a help!

Dame Fashion has a way of keeping us on our toes. We can never quite sit back and say, "I'm all settled for the next year!" For instance, two things will concern the woman who decides to make this change in her hair style—How to keep the back hair-line trim and appealing, and how to make her hair stay up just after she has trained it into a long page-boy bob! Take an honest look at that back hairline of yours after you have combed and brushed your hair high on your head. Not very beautiful, is it? What can you expect if you have allowed hair dressers or barbers to hack away at it for years? But you've got to groom it into a smooth even line and train the hair to grow softly and naturally upward. For a time you may use a tiny barrette or small hairpin to keep it up, but by late fall it should stay of its own accord.

Take an honest look at that back hairline.

How to Train Straggly Hairs

Each day brush those harsh straggly hairs upward by letting your head hang down and brush toward the crown of your head. If you are not going to business, knot it high in a roll, pin up the ends, and tie a bandanna around it. That holds it in place.

Each night before going to bed apply a scalp pomade or a good hair tonic along the hairline. Gently massage it. The rich lubricant will not only feed the starving tissue but the rubbing will stimulate growth.

Don't have your hair cut again—just let it grow. Later on you may have it shaped, once you determine which high style you will wear. Or you may just twist your long hair into becoming puffs on top of your head. Many girls are letting their hair grow long.

As your hairline grows, attempt to keep it curled for gala nights with very small curlers, the iron, or by twisting it on hairpins. We will all have to go through the growing pains unless we have been wise enough to keep our hairline unclipped. During the heart-breaking stage you might pin false curls over the ragged ends.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Cologne Is Feminine Necessity

Cologne is an extremely refreshing body rub and is also a luxurious body deodorant. You will find that an after-bath rubdown of cologne before going to bed will leave a lovely fragrance clinging to your sheets in the morning. This makes for the kind of daintiness that lovely woman seeks—a faint fragrance that seems to be a part of their personality, exuding from them as they move and breathe.

A good brand of cologne, one with a distinctive personality, in its fragrance, should be used. It should hint at lightheartedness, glitter and gaiety.

Cologne, by the way, makes a splendid gift, and for this purpose several brands are available in unique bottles as an adornment to the dressing table.

Spies During World War

During the World war, the British Intelligence service, through a simple trick, finished the career of a clever Turkish spy. Securing his secret address in Constantinople, the service in says Collier's Weekly, the service in London sent him $150 in cash in a plain envelope that, when intercepted by the Turkish censor, was considered to be "sufficient with the 'dence' of his dealing with the enemy." Consequently he was executed.

Star Dust

★ Tells All—In Good Taste

★ They Stick to Type

★ Ezra—For Example

—By Virginia Vale

WHEN a wife tells all—or almost all—it's bound to be interesting. Especially if she is the wife of a famous actor. In "Charles Laughton and I" Mrs. Laughton, well known in her own right as Elsa Lanchester, has written a delightful book which tells a great deal about herself, more about her husband, and quite a bit about other people. And she has done it cleverly and in the best of taste, which is unusual.

Laughton had made a success on the English stage before Hollywood heard of him; in fact, it took an appearance on the stage in New York to make the movie moguls clamor for him. His performance in "The Private Lives of Henry the Eighth," as "Henry," introduced him to the American public, and made Americans exclaim in amazement that at last the English had turned out a good picture.

Many of our American movie actors could take a tip from Laughton. From the first, he refused to be typed. He'd play a pickpocket successfully, and immediately he'd have a lot of offers to play pickpockets. He would refuse them, because he didn't want to be stamped with that one kind of role forever.

We have James Cagney doing the same thing over and over; in "Angels With Dirty Faces" he's a tough guy again.

Louise Rainer

(But then, when he broke away from that characterization, in "Boy Meets Girl," it wasn't such a success, was it?) In "The Great Waltz" we have Louise Rainer (yes, she's an American; just got her citizenship papers, and wrote a "poem" about it—) doing what she did in "The Great Ziegfeld" and "The Big City," crying through smiles, or smiling through tears, whichever way you like to put it. In "The Cowboy and the Lady" we have Gary Cooper playing the stern man of the plains as usual.

But let's be patriotic and avoid the suggestion that perhaps these American actors can't do anything else.

Douglas Corrigan threw a bombshell when he came out with the truth about the salary he's really getting for "The Flying Irishman"—just $50,000 less than RKO had said he was being paid. It's going to be embarrassing if other movie folk follow his example.

You might mark down Jane Warren as the latest of the Rudy Vallee discoveries. She's been Jane Warren only since he first heard her sing and she was signed up for the movies; before that she was Earleynne Schools. It looks as if she'd soon be another of the stars who were launched by Vallee.

If the truth about Ezra Stone were generally known, the young folk of this country would probably loathe his name. Mothers would be saying to their sons, "Of course you have time to do it; just look at Ezra Stone!"

Stone, you know, has been for some time one of the stars in "What a Life," one of New York's hit shows, and has been appearing on Kate Smith's radio show as well. He is also being considered for a featured role in Paramount's screen version of "What a Life," which involves making tests and seeing people. Three mornings a week he teaches dramatics at the Academy of Allied Arts. The other day somebody asked him why he didn't take on a milk route to fill up his spare time. Incidentally, Ezra is just 20.

Lanny Ross is another young man who hasn't been afraid of hard work. Lanny—christened Launcelot Patrick Ross—appeared in vaudeville when he was two. He worked his way through Yale, studied law at Columbia, and got into radio by singing with a quartet at NBC. Then he combined the movies with radio, he began giving concerts—and now he's putting in his summers on the stage, planning to do straight dramatic roles in New York before long.

ODDS AND ENDS—Al Goodman, conductor of the "Hit Parade," does everything from a fox trot to a fandango while he's conducting. . . . For years Joel McCrea has wanted to tell Cecil B. DeMille that he used to deliver newspapers at the director's home; he got his chance when he appeared recently on DeMille's radio program—and Cecil B. remembered him. . . . Don Ameche hasn't had a haircut for ages; he's getting ready to play "L'Artisan" in the movies. . . . Frances Langford has sung practically every hit song of recent years on the radio; but when she sings for friends she goes back to "Night and Day." . . . When Clark Gable appears on the radio it means a problem for the police force. They rope off the alleys in the rear of the theater to keep the crowds back.

GOD'S GREAT LOVE

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 2:1-12
GOLDEN TEXT—God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life.—John 3:16

Christmas Day on Sunday—what an appropriate combination! Today we commemorate the birth of our Lord, the coming of our Redeemer to dwell among men on the day of the week which is a perpetual remembrance of His resurrection from the dead—the Lord's Day. He came as the babe of Bethlehem's manger in order that He might in His death and resurrection from the grave prove His victory over sin and death. For those who know and love the true spirit of Christmas, this should be a great day of rejoicing in Christ.

We have an unusual opportunity to study the birth of Jesus from a text not commonly used for Christmas, namely, the coming of the Wise Men from the East to find and to worship Him. It is suggested that their experiences may be considered as showing the way to Jesus, who is the perfect revelation of God's great love. We should

I. Look for His Sign (vv. 1-3).

While most of their fellow men saw nothing but an unusually bright star (if they even noted that much, in their hurried devotion to the interests of everyday life), the men of the East showed that they were wise by recognizing that here was the promised sign of Numbers 24:17. Be sure to read that great prophecy. When they told Herod, he, fearing lest his own power and prominence should be challenged, became troubled in his heart.

The parallel to our day is striking. Everywhere in our lives, personal and national, are the unmistakable signs of the presence and power of Jesus. Most people heed them not in their mad pursuit of gold and pleasure. Others hate His name, and would destroy His influence on earth. Let us be among the wise men who come today to seek and worship Him.

II. Listen to God's Word (vv. 4-6). The Wise Men knew that He was to come, but they needed further light. They knew where to find it—in God's own Word. How different would be the history that is in the making in our day if instead of turning to the philosophies of men, or trusting in the might of armaments, we would turn to God's Word and let it lead us all to Christ, the Saviour of the world, the Prince of Peace.

III. Seek the Saviour (vv. 7-9). Different motives moved in the hearts of those who consulted the Scriptures on that far-off day in Jerusalem. Herod, while hypocritically professing to want to worship, really was looking into it so that he might kill Jesus. There are hypocrites who study God's Word in our day for the same purpose while ostensibly worshipping. The people of Jerusalem had the curious bystander's interest in an unusual event. They have their counterpart in our churches and communities on this Christmas Day of 1938. Then there were the chief priests and scribes, who had a purely professional interest in finding what the Scriptures taught concerning this promised One. There are plenty of that kind of religious leaders and workers today.

None of these actually sought the Saviour except the Wise Men. Thank God for the thousands of men, women, and children who will today seek the Christ who is the very reason for the observance of Christmas, but who has been all but lost in the nonsense and commercialism that have practically ruined Christmas as a sacred "holy day."

IV. Worship Him (vv. 10-12).

These faithful seekers found Him, and in Him they found joy (v. 10), worship (v. 11), opportunity for sacrifice of self and gifts (v. 11), and fellowship with God in the great work of redemption (v. 12). God spoke to them, gave them a personal and secret commission which thwarted the wicked plans of Herod.

Christmas may mean all of that to each one of us if we let the Lord Jesus come into our lives in all the beauty of His redeeming love and holiness. To you who read these lines just now, the writer makes this plea in the name of Christ—let Him have your life and transform it by His grace and for His glory. Only thus can you have a joyful and blessed Christmas.

The Parent Mind

The souls of the sons of God are greater than their business; and they are thrown out into life, not to do a certain work, but to be a certain thing; to have some sacred lineaments, to show some divine tint of the Parent Mind from which they came.—Martineau.

The Nation's Progress

National progress is the sum of individual industry, energy, and uprightness, as national decay is of individual idleness, selfishness and vice.

Quaint Cross-Stitch Pincushions for Gifts

THE Town Improvement association was giving a sale to raise funds in a village where we were visiting. Our hostess had been to the sale early in the day and triumphantly displayed tiny cross-stitched pincushions purchased for Christmas gifts. They were so colorful and quaint that we went in search of some. We found them, but on every one was pinned a ticket "SOLD!"

The top of the cushion should be made on tapestry canvas or round thread art linen so that the threads may be counted easily in making the cross-stitches. This foundation material should be marked off in 1-inch squares as shown in the diagram at the upper right. The numbers indicate the color used for cross-stitching each square. The velvet used for backing adds the richness that all small gifts should have. Sawdust or hair from an old mattress are most satisfactory for stuffing.

Long Live The King!

But It Was a Hard Life--

All Europe marveled at the pomp and splendor of Louis Fourteenth. Yet, in his 77 years, the French King had no refrigerator, fans or telephone... no radio or movies... no rubber tired tractor... no inflated tires on his gaudy coach.

So, it appears that we Americans don't live like Kings at all. We live better... far beyond the dreams of our pioneers.

The people of the Klemme Community not only live better than the old-time Kings, but we live better than most of the farmers in the United States, because our farms are more productive.

Go East, West, North or South, just a few hundred miles in any direction from Klemme and you will appreciate your home town and your home farms.

There is no place like home if you live in the Klemme Community.

Therefore, lets make Merry and be Happy and Thankful at this Christmas time.

Please accept our congratulations for your achievements in 1938, and our best wishes for your success in 1939.

Two Weddings Take Place At The Reformed Church Over Holidays

MISS DALIA STROMER AND FERNON GRIGGS MARRIED AT REFORMED CHURCH

Married Tuesday; Will Be At Home On Griggs Farm Southeast Of Klemme After Jan. 1

Dalia Bertha Stromer, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Stromer, and Fernon F. Griggs were united in marriage Tuesday, December 27, at high noon, at the Klemme Reformed church, by the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch in a double ring ceremony. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Burk of Goodell, sister and brother-in-law of the groom. Mrs. Griggs wore a teal blue silk crepe dress with deep wine accessories and the matron of honor wore a dark green silk crepe dress with black accessories. The groom and best man both wore the conventional blue. The bride wore a shoulder bouquet of white roses. The groom wore a white carnation in the lapel of his coat. The attendants also wore white carnations.

After the ceremony about twenty guests gathered at the home of the bride's mother where a three course dinner was served. The table decorations were carried out in crystal and white, a three tier layer cake baked and decorated by the bride's sister, Mrs. Rudolph Bienert, as the center piece. Small china cups and place cards were also used as decorations. Miss Evelyn Bienert of Forest City and Miss Blanch Murley of Britt waited on table, and Mrs. Paul Stromer, Mrs. Rudolph Bienert, and Mrs. Victor Huenemann, served the dinner.

Mrs. Griggs was born and grew to womanhood in the Klemme community. She received her education and graduated with the class of 1919 from the Klemme High School and attended Waldorf and Ellsworth colleges. She was confirmed in the Klemme Reformed church and has been an active worker in all church activities since.

Mr. Griggs graduated from the rural school and has since been farming for himself on his father's farm, to which place he will take his bride.

The out of town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. J. Griggs, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Burk and Kenneth Griggs of Goodell; Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Bienert and son of Forest City; Miss Lela Griggs of Ames; Mr. Daniel Boone of Des Moines; and Miss Vivian Hogansen of Alexander.

A reception was held in their honor at the Goodell Community Hall, Tuesday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Griggs left today (Wednesday) for a short honeymoon to Minnesota. They will be at home on their farm after January 1st.

GENERAL OFFICE OF NORTHERN LUMBER CO. RAZED BY FIRE

An early morning fire destroyed the general office building of the Northern Lumber Company at Estherville, Tuesday.

The building was of brick construction and the estimated loss was placed at over $20,000. It is thought that the fire was caused by defective electrical wiring.

The building stands close to the lumber yard but firemen prevented the flames from reaching the piles of lumber and the loss was confined entirely to the office building.

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch performed the ceremony which was witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Esk, Mr. Esk being a brother of the groom and Mrs. Esk a sister of the bride.

The bride wore a deep wine colored dress and the groom wore a conventional blue serge suit.

The young couple, who are well known in the Klemme and Belmond communities, will make their home on a farm near Belmond.

NATURE'S ODDITIES

Nature provides for the preservation of its children in strange and various ways. When a mother mouse becomes alarmed for the safety of her young, she calls out a peculiar sounding warning cry. Upon hearing this cry the young grip the loose skin on their mother's back with their mouth and she drags them away.

Although it is not commonly known, some snakes bring forth their young alive, while others lay eggs which are incubated by the heat of the sun. The common garter snake found in Iowa brings forth its young alive.

No doubt almost everyone has seen a snake with its body bulged out much larger than its head and you have wondered how a snake could swallow such a large piece of food. Nature has given snakes the facility of literally "unhinging" their jaws when they attempt to swallow a large object.

It is strange, but when a mother skunk is found with a litter of young, she can be handled easily as long as she is with her young. The mother skunks seem to know that the discharge of any scent would harm her young, as well as the intruder.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood. You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, sick or out of sorts. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to get rid of excess poisonous body waste. They are antiseptic to the urinary tract and tend to relieve irritation and the pain it causes. Many grateful people recommend Doan's. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Style Pendulum Swings to Handsome Ostrich Finery

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FRILLS, feathers and furbelows mark the lady of fashion today and a lovely lady she is indeed, an alluring creature utterly feminine in her Edwardian grandeur. The long post-war cycle is over and with it has gone the tailored career woman, trim and uncompromising with her boyish figure and her workmanlike clothes. Back into favor come portrait gowns, picturesque dinner costumes topped by whimsical evening hats, nosegays or violets nestling in long fur stoles, operalength evening gloves and back comes ostrich feathers placing their glamorous seal on the return to femininity which colors the whole current fashion picture.

In the millinery field, ostrich sets the style for the new dress hats with their flattering softness. Long sweeping feathers droop gracefully from worldly dinner hats. Lordly plumes toss above high-piled curls for evening or lend height to tiny formal daytime hats for fur-coat wear. All ostrich toques and bonnets, without a hint of fabric, are cleverly molded to the head. Not only do ostrich plumes go to the head on bonnets, toques and picture hats for formal daytime and dinner wear, but even tailored street hats use discreet flat-worked feathers or ostrich montures and motifs that are smartly conservative.

Outstanding in the evening wardrobe are the new ostrich wraps which are designed in any number of types and lengths from brief shoulder capelets to full-length coats and capes. They are in black or white or are superbly colorful. With the present trend to the purely feminine, the ostrich muff has returned to prominence for both formal daytime and evening wear. Carried with the formal daytime costume the ostrich muff lends infinite chic but it is of two-fold charm when it complements an evening wrap of matching ostrich as pictured to the left in the illustration. Paquin designs this capelike coat and muff of black uncured ostrich. Many smaller round muffs of ostrich are also shown that are youthfully pert and extremely smart for dinner or afternoon wear.

The long, long ostrich stole adopted this season by the duchess of Kent has unlimited possibilities. It may be draped or wound about the shoulders for protection or simply for flattery. It will be especially outstanding in black, black-and-white, pure white or the modish vintage tones. The one shown to the right in the picture is fashioned of long white feathers with black-dyed tips.

This season's interpretation of the ever-graceful ostrich fan is unusually lovely. Festive fans in exciting shades are carried, also very handsome all-black types that set a theater gown or dinner costume off to perfection. The evening fan pictured is of graduated uncured ostrich plumes in pale pink with an uncured ostrich hair ornament in the new deep plumbeous shade.

The encouraging part of the ostrich vogue is that the new feather fashions start with simple items on the hat and fetching little inexpensive neckpieces and scores of other unpretentious ostrich fancies that are within the reach of any limited clothes budget.

PETER CALLED TO SERVE

LESSON TEXT—John 1:40-42; Luke 5:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.—Mark 1:17.

As we embark on the New Year, we gather in our Bible schools to take up an interesting series of studies on the life and work of Peter. The life story of any great and useful man is worthy of our careful study. The life of Peter has peculiar interest because he was so intensely human, and yet so gloriously used of God.

Our lesson for today starts at the right point, for we meet Peter when he as Simon first met the Lord. He was a mature man by that time, successful in business and "settled" in life, but with him (as with us) life did not really begin until he met the Lord Jesus.

I. He Was Brought to Christ (John 1:40-42).

Andrew, of whom we know but little, is a character greatly beloved because having found the Christ he at once set out to bring his brother to Him. He probably did not know that in bringing his rough fisherman brother to the Lord he was bringing one of the leaders of all time. The important thing is that he brought him.

The history of the Church abounds with the stories of humble men and women who have been used to win others to Christ, who have in turn been greatly used for Him. Think of the humble man who led Spurgeon to Christ, the Sunday School teacher who dealt with Moody, the simple but earnest Moravians who won Wesley—and be encouraged. You may have someone near you who may be awaiting your word to bring him to Jesus.

II. He Was Given a New Name (John 1:42).

Simon, meaning "to hear," is changed to Peter, which means "rock." The blessed Lord who in His omniscience knew what the change in Peter's heart was to mean in his life, gave him a new name to fit his new character.

What a blessed truth it is that God in Christ can and will take the blustering fisherman and transform all of his good qualities into power and usefulness for Himself. Thus God who knows just what we are is ready and willing to make us what we ought to be in Christ. Have you gone through the experience of having Christ say: "Thou art . . . thou shalt be?" It may mean that you have passed through or will pass through the pressing experiences which are needed to weld together your characteristics into a "rock," but if it is God's hand that makes the change you will find it to be all joy.

III. His Occupation Was Changed (Luke 5:1-11).

Christ had chosen Peter as one of those who should forsake all and follow Him, as one of his disciples in the inner circle of the Twelve. Note how graciously He carries out His purpose. One day as He stands to teach on the shore of the sea of Galilee the crowd presses Him, and He steps into a boat and asks the boatman to put out from the land. And it "just happened" to be the boat of Simon, who had about a year before met the Lord and received the new name of Peter.

Such things do not "happen." The destinies of men are in the hands of God. The day and hour for Peter's call had come, and here he was to be taught by Jesus through a miraculous draught of fish that he was to be a fisher of men. God's clock always runs on time. Remember that, and also be assured that if you are His child not even the simplest "happening" in your life is unknown to Him. He who numbers the hairs on our heads, He who observes the fall of a sparrow, is not lacking in loving interest and care for His children.

Had our lesson been deliberately chosen for a New Year's message it could hardly have been more appropriate. To the one who knows not Christ as Saviour there is an invitation to begin the New Year by coming to Him. To the Christian there is the admonition to do as Andrew did—bring your brother or friend to Christ. We are not all called to leave our daily work and become full-time Christian workers, but every believer should be a soul-winner. To the one who has heard the call of God to leave his nets and follow the Lord in full-time service, here is the urgent renewing of that call. Step out in faith now and follow Him. To the church or religious worker discouraged by the failure of a social or ethical program here is the lesson and example of a life changed by personal contact with the Lord Jesus. The New Year may be blessed and fruitful indeed, if we each one heed the lesson of the day.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Asks How Do You Get Your Vitamin D? Relates Need for and Sources Of This Necessary Vitamin

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THERE is scarcely a mother of a young baby today who has not at one time or another been told to give her child cod-liver oil. Perhaps she does not know this substance must be given to the baby for the vitamin D that it contains. But she has heard that there is something in cod-liver oil which makes it valuable to the baby's health.

A generation ago, cod-liver oil was given to children in the winter time; "to build them up" after colds or various other respiratory illnesses. It was not until 1921, however, that a long series of painstaking investigations, terminating in the discovery of vitamin D, made it clear that cod-liver oil is valuable as a source of vitamin D, and also why this vitamin is essential in the diet of growing children, as well as adults.

Discovery of Vitamin D

After years of patient work and many thrilling and dramatic experiments, seven forms of vitamin D have been revealed by science. And scientists have also solved the mystery of how such widely separated factors as cod-liver oil; sunlight; a diet that is rich in, and carefully balanced with calcium and phosphorus; and ultra-violet light, all can perform the same service for the body.

Readers of this column may have observed that the discovery of a number of the vitamins came about chiefly through the efforts of investigators to discover a method of treating or curing obscure nutritional diseases. In most instances, however, carefully controlled laboratory experiments played their part in reaching the ultimate goal after some clue had been found as to what the mysterious substance might be that helped to control a baffling nutritional disease. The discovery of vitamin D was no exception!

Vitamin D and Rickets

Vitamin D is associated intimately with the prevention and cure of rickets, the most devastating nutritional disease of children in temperate climates. Indeed, it is the moderate, and in some cases the small amount of sunshine in the temperate zone that accounts, partially for the presence of rickets.

Historians have given us reason to believe that this disease, may have existed in England even before the Roman conquest. Certainly it appeared in a serious form, both in England and in other North European countries, in the Seventeenth century. In fact, early literature refers to it as the English disease, and the early attempts to fathom its causes were written in Latin by English and Dutch doctors during the 1800's.

In rickets, the child's head grows large and out of proportion to the body, while the leg and arm bones, and in severe cases even the ribs, are bent and twisted out of their normal shape.

Need for Calcium and Phosphorus

The two principal minerals required for constructing the bones and teeth are calcium, obtained chiefly from milk, cheese and green leafy vegetables, and phosphorus, found in generous amounts in eggs, whole grain cereals and dried legumes. But one of the things that made it so difficult for scientists to determine the cause of rickets was the fact that apparently well fed children, who had plenty of calcium and phosphorus, frequently developed the disease.

Mystery of Cod-Liver Oil

Cod-liver oil had been used for many years because of its supposedly "tonic" or "building" properties, when it was observed that regular doses of cod-liver oil not only cured rickets in children, but also cured the corresponding disease in adults, called osteomalacia, in which the bones become soft as the calcium and phosphorus already deposited in them are withdrawn and excreted.

Fat and Vitamin D

One of the strangest paradoxes to the scientists in their early investigations was the fact that while cod-liver oil appeared to cure rickets, another substance high in fat—butter fat, did not. More research work was necessary before it was discovered that while butter was rich in vitamin A, cod-liver oil contained two vitamins, one of which was later named vitamin D.

Effect of Sunlight

More work was necessary and it took years of patient effort before science unraveled the mystery of how sunlight could have the same apparent effect in preventing rickets as cod-liver oil.

Once nutritionists understood how sunlight acting on a fatty substance in the skin could produce vitamin D, however, it was not difficult to carry the process a step further and learn how to fortify foods with a satisfactory content of vitamin D.

Today we have at our disposal irradiated milk, or milk to which a vitamin D concentrate has been added. Margarine, too, has been enriched not only with vitamin D, but with vitamin A, so that this moderate-priced spread for bread has been made an effective vitamin carrier.

Natural Food Sources of Vitamin D

The richest natural sources of vitamin D are the fish-liver oils, including the liver-oil of the tuna, swordfish, rock fish, salmon, halibut, mackerel, cod and haddock. The body oils of many fish also furnish substantial amounts. That accounts for the fact that canned salmon has been regarded as such a splendid food in the diet of children and adults. It is not only a good source of protein and of energy values, but it contains substantial amounts of the minerals, calcium, phosphorus and iodine, and has been found to be an unusually good food source of vitamin D.

Egg yolk contains small amounts of vitamin D, and when eaten regularly, the quantity is enough to have a significant effect in the diet of children.

Vitamin D Requirements

So important is vitamin D considered, that the United States Children's Bureau advises that cod-liver oil or some other form of this vitamin be supplied to all babies, beginning at the age of two or three weeks.

Mothers should be guided by the advice of their physician in determining when to start the use of a vitamin D preparation and what quantities to give. But if they want to give their babies the blessing bestowed on them by the scientists who discovered vitamin D, they must not overlook this important substance.

As guardians of the health of both children and adults, mothers should see to it that vitamin D is supplied regularly through the use of eggs and salmon; irradiated foods and those fortified with vitamin D; and if necessary, fish-liver oils or concentrates.

Questions Answered

Miss G. M. L.—Yes, it is true that sweet potatoes contain a small amount of protein. In fact, their protein is composed of four amino acids known to be essential to nutrition. Some of the protein may be lost if the potato is boiled, but it is entirely preserved when the potato is cooked by dry heat.

Mrs. M. B.—Both cooked lentils and baked kidney beans contain over 20 per cent of carbohydrate. Low carbohydrate vegetables include cabbage, celery, cauliflower, kale, lettuce and spinach.

Dressy Midwinter Fashions

1641 1646

HAVE something brand new and smart, to cheer you up during the after-holiday time when you feel a little let-down. Here are two of the very smartest things you can wear, both just as pretty and new as they can be! And they're so easy to make that you'll enjoy doing it, and of course you'll save, decidedly, by choosing your own fabrics. Each pattern is accompanied by a detailed sew chart.

Soft Afternoon Dress.

This is a lovely design, very smart and new. It does very nice things to your figure. The wide girdle makes you look doll-waisted, the gathered bodice fills out your bustline, and the full skirt is extremely graceful. The high neckline is scalloped to make it softer and more becoming. In velvet, silk crepe, satin, or thin wool, this will be one of the prettiest afternoon dresses you ever owned!

Suspender Skirt With Jacket.

Here's a perfectly charming new princess-skirt, in suspender fashion, topped by a short little tuxedo jacket. You can wear the skirt with your own blouses, or just with the jacket, so that you'll find it very useful. See how tiny it makes your waist look, and notice the cute, crescent-shaped pockets. Very simple to make.

like all two-piece styles. Choose tweed, wool crepe, plaid or flannel.

The Patterns.

No. 1641 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material.

No. 1646 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3½ yards of 54-inch material with long sleeves.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Keep Baking Oven Clean.—Many a cake is spoiled by burning fragments left in the oven. Rub the inside of the oven frequently with coarse emery paper. This will remove rust and keep the oven in good condition.

To Judge Grapefruit.—Notice its firmness, weight, and shape as well as the thickness of the skin. Good quality fruit is firm yet springy to the touch. It is well shaped, thin skinned and heavy for its size.

Improving Mince Pies.—Run your mincemeat through the mincing machine before putting it into pastry. It makes it much more easy to digest than if the currants, etc., are left whole. Remember that mince pies should be served very hot.

When Fruit Cake Becomes Dry.—Fruit cake that has become dry may be moistened by saturating a clean cloth with spiced fruit juice, wrapping the cake in the cloth and returning it to its airtight container for a day or two.

Lintless Tea Towels.—Tea towels will not leave lint on china and glassware if they are passed through a weak starch solution when laundered.

For Creaking Shoes.—Rub the sole of a creaking shoe with a flannel dipped in boiled linseed oil.

Forecast in Silk

For the woman who looks ahead when she buys there are some exceedingly interesting advance silks on display. For the first new silk print a stylized palm tree design is suggested such as fashions the dress pictured. This print has the advantage of being dark enough to wear for town under the fur coat, and it will continue to be chic for spring in that it is new this season, both as to color and patterning. Small neat tailored motifs in high-style colors are the desirable prints for immediate wear.

Grand Blouses of Metal Top Skirts

A gorgeous blouse in your wardrobe is a necessary luxury this season. It's left to you either to buy 'em or make 'em. The shops are showing the new glamor blouse in dazzling array. Likewise the fabric sections are scintillating with showings of gleaming lame in gold, silver and color, also rustling taffetas and crisp moires and lustrous slipper satins. A mere remnant of either in the hands of the woman who "makes her own" will transform into a blouse softly styled or smartly fashioned in the new jacket silhouette.

Gold Glittering On Winter Frocks

All may not be gold that glitters, but in the multitude of short lame afternoon dresses gold is the favored basic metal. The gold may be nothing more than a pin-stripe on a black wool or silk background; it may be combined with other less precious metal threads; or it may completely prevail to form a lavish cloth-of-gold.

This all-gold lame makes a striking "don't-dress-for-dinner" gown—so short it almost reaches knee-level—and long-sleeved.

Snug Waistlines

Some of the newest coats and dresses fit so snugly at the waistline and the hips that a draped line results.

Detachable Hoods

Detachable hoods accompany much of the fur coats that have been created to appeal to the college girl who spends much time out-of-doors.

Ink Spots And Spatters
By Jergie

We failed to receive a contribution to the column this week so we must struggle along alone. The contribution sent in recently is still causing many a chuckle. One reader said that the "unsigned" contribution hit the spot and he suggested that we print more "unsigned" articles.

Some of the unsigned articles would have to be printed on asbestos paper with scorch-proof ink!
I-S-A-S
This scribe was present at the annual Christmas party staged by the Mason City Chamber of Commerce... and the way our good friend Earl Hall got panned was almost pitiful. Some of the "gags" pulled off would knock off all the spots from this column of spatters!
Earl wanted to trade a year's subscription to the Globe-Gazette for a load of cobs... but the farmer whom he approached with the proposition said if he had a load of cobs he wouldn't need the Globe-Gazette!

The Klemme Times is not that kind of paper... it's even rougher!

I-S-A-S
It seems that friends of Earl Miller are very conspicuous by their absence! Miller has walked plumb clear away from any popularity he ever had in Iowa. He will take over the office of Secretary of State a very lonely man.

I-S-A-S
There is another story going the rounds about a "jitterbug." C. G. Waterman can tell it very ably! He stutters just right!

I-S-A-S
We like the name... Anderson... the new coach who will take over the job of building a football team at Iowa University. It takes a good snooze-chewing Scandihoovian to show the world that Iowa can have the best football team in the world Give Andy a couple of years time and watch the result. All he needs now is some assistants by the name of Hanson, Nelson or Johnson... and a few Rasmussens, Petersons and Olsons on the athletic board... and even Minnesota will set up and take notice and think another republican landslide hit them!

I-S-A-S
And we have heard it said that Klemme is the most nicely decorated town in this part of the state this year. Holiday decorations can be overdone. The proportion seems to be just about right in Klemme this year. A job well done.

GRADES 7 & 8
Eighth Grade English Class

We have observed Christmas week by writing Christmas stories, descriptions and poems. The eighth grade read "The Christmas Carol" by Dickens.

The Christmas tree is decorated. On our bulletin board we have two white angels, a Christmas tree, stars, tinsel, and poinsettias arranged attractively. Poems written by Barbara Johnson and Robert Jahnke are written on the front board. Everyone has finished their gifts for their mothers.

Dental cards were distributed Wednesday. Corrine Merkel was the first to return hers.

Julia Bell will serve as our librarian for the next two weeks.

Friday afternoon we had our Christmas program and party. The fifth and sixth grade entertained us and we also presented several short plays. After this we opened our gifts.

WOODCHUCK GIVEN RATING AS GAME

The ground hog, or woodchuck, has at last come into its own as a game animal. Although an increasing number of riflemen—many of them carrying costly weapons fitted with telescopic sights—take the field after the woodchucks, no one has set up any rules in favor of the quarry until this fall.

Now, in Pennsylvania, a woodchuck hunter must have a state license, cannot kill more than four in a day, and must observe a six-weeks closed season. That the woodchuck is to be taken seriously as game is also borne out by the fact that Pennsylvania has had four casualties, hunters being mistaken for woodchucks.

Although the modern sportsman discards the woodchuck after he has killed it, and is satisfied with having killed a farm pest, the pioneers esteemed the woodchuck when young and tender, as a table delicacy. Woodchuck hide made the best whiplashes and was sometimes used for moccasins.

NEW SCHOOLHOUSE

There really is going to be a new school house next year and from what we hear it is going to be quite nifty. It isn't up yet, but some bricks have been laid and from now on we should see much progress.

The wall at the end of the corridors on three sides of the building will be glass blocks.

The gym will be larger and thus accommodate more people. The boys will have a much better place in which to play basketball and will undoubtedly win every game.

The students will be able to get a lot of benefit from much needed equipment as there will be new supplies throughout the building.

The scoreboard will look very nice in the new building and it also will be appreciated in the old one this year.

Some of the desks will be new. As long as we are in the present building, we should show as much courtesy as we would in the new one. We shouldn't take the desks all apart, but remember that some of them will be used at least a few years longer.

The floors will be a new material—aspault tile.

The clocks will be fixed so that every clock in the building will read the same. All of the class bells, including a tardy bell and an outside gong for the 8:30, 8:55, 12:40 and 12:55 bells will be rung through a program system controlled by a central clock.

The office and the grade and class-rooms will be wired and later on it will be fixed so that the person in the office can correspond with the various rooms. A victrola or the radio can be played in the office and can be heard in the various rooms. This is a new system, and it should prove to be a great advantage.

A new heating system will be installed.

It is too bad that the seniors can't start high school over and enjoy this new building with the others. It will be a great improvement and will add to the appearance of the town.—Doris.

I don't think anyone hangs up a stocking unless he believes in Santa Claus. That's why I have never done it before. But this year will be different. After all these years of waiting, Klemme is getting a new schoolhouse. There must be a Santa Claus, so up goes my sock—both of them.

G.O.P. Keeps Election Promise,
Drafts New Pension Measures

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Congress

As the U. S. becomes a nation of older men and women (caused by declining birth rate) federal-state support of the indigent aged is no longer a political football but has emerged as an acute problem recognized by Democrats and Republicans alike. The present social security setup was a New Deal inspiration, but 1937's recession proved even this revolutionary step was insufficient. This month almost every congressman converging on Washington carries a new plan in his portfolio, foreshadowing the most heated battle to confront the seventy-sixth congress.

Many Republicans would like to forget that 40 of their 81 new members were elected this year on promises to support the Townsend measure or bring the pension issue to a vote. But one who refuses to forget, and who will undoubtedly fire the opening gun in next month's pension argument, is Massachusetts' Rep. Allen T. Treadway. Ranking minority member of the house ways and means committee, he will embarrass his political partisans by offering a resolution for hearings on Townsendism.

When pension arguments are sifted down, Washington observers expect Townsendism to drop from the picture, to be followed by a clear-cut Democrat-vs.-Republican debate on how social security shall be amended. In this argument the most surprising feature may be Republican support of a $30-a-month federal old age contribution, featuring a 60-year age limit as against the present limit of 65 years. If states could equal the $30 federal contribution, pensioners would then receive $60 a month.

Where the federal government could raise $30 a month, or where states could raise even less, is a moot problem. There are currently 1,656,700 persons on pension rolls, costing the U. S. about $238,500,000 for the fiscal year. States pay $250,129,000. This gives each of the 1,656,700 indigent an average of $19. If all eligible persons were added to the rolls, the number would swell to more than 3,000,000. Since the U. S. is already using social security payroll taxes as fast as they come in, and since most states are unable to raise their $15 monthly share for each pensioner, any plans to increase payments must be preceded by plans for financing the system.

While Republicans are attempting to iron out their pension program, the administration prepares to offer congress a sweeping plan for revising the present old age insurance system. Probable recommendations:

(1) Monthly payments to widows and dependent children of workers covered by social security, plus $200 funeral expenses to families of "covered" workers who die before 65.

(2) Payments to wives and dependent children of men who have retired at 65, but whose monthly income under social security is insufficient.

(3) Starting old age payments January 1, 1940, instead of January 1, 1942.

(4) Immediate inclusion in social security of 2,600,000 seamen, bank employees, charitable and religious workers; inclusion in 1941 of 6,000,000 farm and domestic workers.

(5) Provision for payments of $10 more each month to married men than to single men.

Europe

The long-cherished hope that Great Britain would eventually discover the futility of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's dictator "appeasement" policy is at last bearing fruit. Faced with a new series of crises, Mr. Chamberlain is presumably forced to reverse his stand, or resign. Most significant was the dinner at Lord Stanley Baldwin's home, attended by King George VI and a group of right-wing Labor leaders, all strenuous opponents of the Chamberlain government.

Even as the king broke bread with this crew, another anti-Chamberlain leader was en route to the U. S. where he leveled veiled criticism at the man whose cabinet he left in anger. Anthony Eden, one-time foreign minister, told the National Association of Manufacturers that democracies must resist "false complacency" in viewing international perils, that "the survival of democracy must depend on the faith which it inspires... the results which it can achieve."

Within a few days the long-awaited results of Mr. Chamberlain's Munich "peace" treaty became despairingly apparent on three fronts, making the prime minister realize he must either turn-about-face (if it is not too late) or resign to be followed by Lord Baldwin or Mr. Eden.

ANTHONY EDEN
Mr. Chamberlain's successor?

Memel. Detached from German East Prussia by the Versailles treaty, later ceded to Lithuania, this 943-square-mile territory on the Baltic is being absorbed back into the Reich without consultation with—or protest from—the four guarantors of the Memel statute (Britain, France, Italy and Japan). Using "Sudeten" methods, Germany first provoked Memelites to cry for autonomy. Following a victorious plebiscite came the cry for "anschluss" (union) with the Reich. Although Hitler announced after the Munich treaty that he had no more European territorial claims, no one doubts his agents are behind the Memel coup.

Ukraine. While world attention has been focused on the Franco-Italian crisis (see below) Hitler has quietly but effectively begun agitation for his projected Ukraine republic, to be carved out of Poland and Russia. A Nazi-inspired autonomy move in the Polish Ukraine, the first step, is being correlated with activity of German agents in the Russian Ukraine. The latter step is especially well timed, since meager reports out of Moscow indicate the Soviet republic is weakened by internal strife. Not content to stop there, Hitler has opened negotiations with Persia and Afghanistan for German exploitation of oil and wheat lands. In the Balkans, Yugoslavia has practically renounced the little entente to follow pro-Nazi Premier Milan Stoyadinovich.

France. No observer believes the recent French-German treaty is worth anything, because the Reich has actually increased anti-French activity since it was signed. France has alliances with Poland and Russia, both of which have been ignored in Germany's Ukrainian drive. France dominates the little entente, which Hitler has defeated in Yugoslavia and is undermining in other Balkan countries. And—most important—France resents Germany's support of Italian demands for Tunisia, Corsica, Nice and Savoy. Current opinion holds that France will surprise Germany and Italy with a strong and unexpected resistance to these territorial demands. In the end, however, Italy may get partial control over the Suez canal and a share in French Somaliland, offering an outlet to the sea from Ethiopia.

International

Any shift in world military power is, invariably followed by economic changes. One of these is world trade, in which Great Britain finds her position threatened by aggressive Germany. Taking a thoroughly revolutionary position, England has now broadened her government trade insurance plan to safeguard exports of materials ordinarily refused as poor risks. Beginning January 1, the export credits department may incur liabilities up to $375,000,000 instead of the present $250,000,000. To cover special risk items, another $50,000,000 has been set aside. The latter policy, incidentally, will facilitate shipment of war goods to China.

If this aggressive British position has caused Germany any worry, Berlin can rejoice in a $17,000,000 barter deal with Mexico, under which she will buy oil in exchange for manufactured items. In this case, Germany's gain is Britain's loss, since London has almost completely severed diplomatic and trade relations with Mexico over expropriation of British-owned oil lands.

Asia

The possibility of a major Far Eastern crisis involving Japan, China and Russia becomes more imminent each week. Far from denying it, Japan has taken new hitches in her economic belt and settled down for a struggle which may begin shortly after January 1. Having made supplementary army-navy appropriations of $1,634,400,000, Japan faces a probable Russo-Chinese alliance forcing her to desperate measures to protect what gains she has already made in Manchuria and China.

Having penetrated deep into the vast Shansi province, Jap troops are confronted with guerrilla attacks which in 10 days cost 6,000 lives. Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, who is already getting supplies from Russia, promises the guerrilla warfare will continue. That Japanese are at a disadvantage fighting so far from their base of operations is evidenced by Chinese recapture of several key towns near Canton.

Two clashes with Russia form the basis for a new war scare. The first concerns Japanese fishing concessions in Russian waters. Though Russia refuses to renew the concessions, which lapse January 1, Tokyo threatens to continue fishing even though an armed patrol is needed. The second dispute centers on Sakhalin island, where the Japs charge Russia is seeking to expel Nipponese oil workers. For her part, Moscow is demanding Japanese payment for the Russian interest in the Chinese eastern railroad, seized when Japan took Manchuria.

Meanwhile Japan has substantiated the belief held by observers for many months, that China's "open door"—guaranteed by the nine-power treaty—is about to be closed. Seeking to liberate Japan and China from dependency on foreign markets, finance and raw materials, Tokyo has virtually dictated what Great Britain and the U. S. can henceforth expect in the way of trading privileges. Shrugging its shoulders over still another treaty broken in 1938, the U. S. state department has called home Nelson T. Johnson, ambassador to China, to see what can be done about it. Since Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy has also been called home from London, it is thought the U. S. may solicit British support for a unified protest against Japan's economic activity in China. Probable result: nothing.

JOBS WANTED

MAYOR.—Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, may retire from office to run for Democratic nomination as Chicago's mayor.

PRESIDENT.—John Nance Garner, vice president of the U. S., is being boomed for the presidency by his boyhood friends at Detroit, Texas. One claim to fame: the mud-chinked log cabin where Garner was born.

SECRETARY.—Anthony Eden, who retired as British foreign secretary in opposition to Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, may return to the cabinet next month as dominions secretary.

LEADER.—Massachusetts' Rep. Joseph Martin will be elected house Republican leader on the first ballot next month, since 109 of the 169 G. O. P. partisans have assured him their support.

Pan-America

Before they left to attend the eighth Pan-American conference at Lima, U. S. delegates spoke optimistically of efforts to unite the Western hemisphere into a solid bloc opposing European or Asiatic aggressors. But the picture looked vastly different from below the equator. At Lima they found representatives of 20 other American nations who exhibited justified coolness toward the "colossus of the north" whose President has taken the lead in what they think might be another attempt at "Yankee imperialism." U. S. delegates discovered that South American nations have their cultural centers in Rome, Paris and Madrid; that despite any U. S. ambitions to the contrary, Pan America will insist on maintaining its trade relations with Europe.

Thus, although Secretary of State Cordell Hull received a warm reception, he could not expect much to come from the conference. South American nations are generally agreed that totalitarian propaganda must be stopped, but they neglect to consider that Nazi trade and propaganda travel together, that countries accepting one must also take the other. This is the principle weakness of a proposal introduced by the Venezuelan delegation, which calls for co-operative action against military aggression but fails to consider methods of blocking political aggression.

A prerequisite to hemispherical defense plans is hemispherical cordiality, which occupies an important place on Mr. Hull's list. Stumbling blocks here are Mexico's communistic policy of expropriating U. S. oil and farm lands, and Argentina's desire for more trade and better relations with Italy and Germany. At best, Pan-American endorsement of President Roosevelt's New world defense plan will be in principle, only, though the conference is undoubtedly giving German, Italian and Japanese interests considerable worry. Their agents are busily at work among delegates.

Shapely Neck Important to Good Looks

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

AS THE mode changes we remodel our bodies! No wonder men marvel at us. One year we are without chests. The next, we develop nicely rounded bosoms! If the walking vogue is a slouch—we slouch and allow our shoulders to grow rounded! Just bring on the style and we grow into it!

Honestly, we are queer, we of the female sex. But at last only good posture and regal carriage is fashionable. Thank heaven for this era's style for now we must learn to walk erect with easy grace. Our shoulders must be firm and lovely to set off the new strapless gowns and swim suits. Our necks, usually neglected, must be beautiful, as appropriate pedestals for smartly coiffured heads.

Exercises will help to fill out chest, and straighten shoulders.

Hair sweeping up into a cluster of curls with tantalizing ringlets in back of our ears. Yes, it is practically the Gibson Girl period returned, and we might conceivably look forward to wasp-waistlines!

To Keep Neck
Beautiful

A few brief rules for keeping the neck beautiful: Scrub it each morning with a rich deep lather and body brush, using a light rotary movement. Rinse it well. Dry well. Powder with the same shade of powder you use for your face. Remember your neck is a continuation of your face!

At night cleanse it with a light cleansing cream. Then, with an upward movement, massage the skin well, using a rich nourishing cream or a bit of mineral oil.

Whenever you think to do it, exercise your neck by bending it forward and backward and rotating it slowly.

There is no beauty in hollow shoulders or a skinny neck. You develop them through exercise and eat enough to fill them out. A simple exercise does wonders for both, here it is:

Lie on your stomach across a chair, balancing the body carefully with feet and arms as if you were swimming the breast stroke. Out straight—slowly to the sides—back until you feel a pull on your shoulder blades. Relax after a minute or two and repeat.

Of course, the actual breast stroke while you are swimming will do more than anything else to make your shoulders beautiful.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

For Glorified Eyes

From Paris comes a new beauty secret that does wonders in rejuvenating tired eyes. For the girl who has read until the small hours to finish a book, or for the lady who's missed out on her normal quota of sleep, this new product is said to restore the sparkle of youth in a jiffy.

It comes in the form of a jar full of featherweight masques saturated in a solution that relieves eye tension and tiredness and leaves the eyes clear and radiantly alive.

You place one of the pads on your eyes and lie down for five minutes of relaxation. There comes a feeling of refreshing coolness to take the sting out of tired eye-balls and gently stimulate the skin area around the eyes, where age and fatigue show first.

Best part of the treatment is that good effect lasts for hours. The pads are harmless.

Quinine Has Saved Many Lives

The quinine tree gets its name from a grateful lady, Countess Chinchon. While her husband was Spanish governor of Peru, she contracted malaria and suffered from it for several years. Then, in 1638, says the Washington Post, she was given tea brewed from cinchona bark. She immediately recovered. Overjoyed, she returned to Spain and publicized this remedy. In the three centuries since she first used it, quinine has saved countless lives, brought relief to millions of malaria sufferers in all tropical countries.

Star Dust

★ So Back Came Olivier

★ A Chance for Stardom

★ Air and Screen Lure

By Virginia Vale

LAURENCE OLIVIER star of Hollywood the other day telling a bit of unflattering truth about himself. Recently reported to play opposite Mel Oberon in "Wuthering Heights" for Samuel Goldwyn, he announced that he was fired last time he was in Hollywood and went home determined never to go there again. All, he'd made a success on stage, both in London and New York—why should he bother pictures? Especially if pictures wouldn't bother with him!

You see, he was asked to go Hollywood five years ago, to work with Greta Garbo in "Queen Christina." "But Garbo didn't like me," announced Mr. Olivier. "And I fired—kicked out."

LAURENCE OLIVIER

Resentfully he departed. But couldn't resist Mr. Goldwyn's persuasions, backed by a handsome pay check.

Incidentally, "Wuthering Heights" will give us something comparatively rare on the screen nowadays—a villain who isn't an American. It is Mr. Olivier, who's British as cheese. Foreign censorship has played hob with pictures in which the villains represented foreign countries the country concerned was practically certain to make a fuss, saying that people would judge all of population by that one bad example. So all villains have had to be Americans. Apparently Olivier can present the kind of villain the Brits won't object to.

One number in Fred Astaire's "The Castles" may be a star-maker. It's "The Girl on the Magazine Cover," and for it Hermes Pan, the picture's dance director, is interviewing 1,000 girls, in order to select the eight prettiest girls in Hollywood. With a start like that, at least one of them ought to have her name above theaters in lights before another year passes.

To return for a moment to "Wuthering Heights," when you see the picture you'll also see great masses of what appears to be real Yorkshire heather. Give credit for that to Nick Stadler, who can trick Mother Nature herself. That heather is made from about 10,000 plain American tumble weeds. The bushes farthest from the camera were sprayed with purple sawdust.

Lanny Ross made two guest appearances on the CBS Hit Parade and was promptly signed up for a full year. It's his first regular radio assignment since he broadcast from Hollywood several months ago.

Patricia Crosby, Bing's fourteen-year-old niece from Seattle, was a visitor at one of her uncle's broadcasts recently, but she refused to sit in the audience. She and her father and mother listened from a booth off-stage, because Patricia thought their presence "might make Uncle Bing nervous."

John Griggs, who plays the villain, "Zero Smith," in the "Howie Wing" radio serial, can have a respite from playing villains if he wants to. Sinclair Lewis has offered him a part in the stage play that he and Fay Wray have written. Griggs thinks he'll take the part if Mrs. Griggs can have one too.

Movie folk have something new to worry about these days. Many of them have been appearing on radio broadcasts that originate on the Coast, and liking both the experience and the pay checks. In fact, it's getting so that a movie actor is likely to feel that he can't really be popular unless he's a success on the air as well as on the screen.

So—every little while up bob rumors that most of the big radio programs now aired from the Coast have decided to return to New York.

ODDS AND ENDS.—Getting a watch isn't so difficult as it used to be, if you live in New York; you just get a place on one of the quiz programs that give prizes to winners, and there you are. Dog owners swear by Bob Becker's "Chats About Dogs," aired on NBC every Sunday afternoon; he's an authority. Western Newspaper Union.

Famous Writer Gave Most Unusual 'Christmas Gift' in All History

In 1891 Robert Louis Stevenson "Bequeathed" His November 13 Birthday to a Little Girl in New England. Who Was Unhappy Because She Had Been Born on December 25 and Thus Was "Cheated Out of a Birthday Party Like All the Other Children Have"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FORTY-SEVEN years ago Henry Clay Ide, a Vermont lawyer who had held various public offices in the Green Mountain state, was appointed American commissioner in the Samoan islands, then held jointly by the United States, Great Britain and Germany. It was not a very important appointment but it became the first link in a chain of circumstances which resulted in one of the most unusual "Christmas gifts" in all history.

Ide's wife and two daughters did not accompany him when he went to Samoa but remained in their Vermont home. Among the residents of Samoa Ide found a famous writer who had become a voluntary exile there for the benefit of his health. This was Robert Louis Stevenson, author of "Treasure Island," "Kidnaped" and a number of other books which have become English classics.

Ide and Stevenson became warm friends. During a conversation one day about the coming Christmas holidays the American told the Englishman that he had a little daughter, Annie, back in charge her to use my said birthday with moderation and humanity, et tanquam bona filia familiae, the said birthday not being as young as it once was, and having carried me in a very satisfactory manner since I can remember.

"And in case the said Annie H. Ide shall neglect or contravene either of the above conditions, I hereby revoke the donation and transfer my rights in the said birthday to the President of the United States of America, for the time being.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal in the year of grace eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

"ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON"

After having this document witnessed by his friends, Lloyd Osbourne and Harold Watts, Stevenson gave it to Ide who sent it with a letter of explanation to his wife. On the morning of December 25, 1891, little Annie Ide walked slowly into the room where a Christmas tree was laden with presents for her and her sister. As usual, she was brooding over her "lost birthday." But her mood soon changed when her mother handed her the "deed of gift" which was hanging on the tree and explained its meaning to her. Thanks to the famous Robert Louis Stevenson she now had a "birthday of her very own" and its celebration would not be overshadowed by the celebration of Christmas.

Little Annie immediately wrote a letter of thanks to Stevenson and sent with it photographs and drawings of herself. In acknowledging her letter Stevenson explained to her how her "new birthday" would work. He wrote:

"You are thus become a month and twelve days younger than you were, but will go on growing older for the future in the regular and human manner from one thirteenth of November to the next. The effect on me is more doubtful; I may, as you suggest, live forever, I might, on the other hand, come to pieces like the one-horse shay at a moment's notice; doubtless the step is risky, but I do not in the least regret that the little American girl. She sat beside him at the end of the native dais and received many fine gifts.

The next year the event was repeated and there was a dinner party in the evening besides. The famous author enjoyed the occasion as much as did the little girl. But that was their last dual celebration for Stevenson died on December 3, 1894. Annie Ide, however, continued to carry out faithfully the conditions of the birthday deed "by the sporting of fine raiment, eating of rich meats and receipt of gifts."

Even after she became a woman and married W. Bourke Cockran, famous New York political leader and congressman, she continued to observe the "birthday" which Stevenson had willed to her. Stevenson proved to be a good prophet for her husband was a wealthy man, and in their luxurious home at Port Washington, Long Island, she received her "gifts" of costly jewelry and arrayed herself in her "fine raiment" of Paris gowns.

Last year, Mrs. Cockran decided that she had enjoyed more than her share of the unique Christmas present which Stevenson had "willed" to her. So, instead of letting it revert to the President of the United States, as Stevenson had whimsically suggested would be done if she should "neglect or contravene" the provisions of his will, she passed the birthday along to her niece, Anita Leslie, a well-known British author who is the daughter of Shane Leslie, Irish poet, novelist and dramatist, and Marjorie Ide Leslie, sister of Annie Ide Cockran.

If ever Miss Leslie decides that she no longer wishes to keep Stevenson's "gift birthday," there are several notables, born on December 25, who would doubtless welcome it. It would be especially fitting, perhaps, if she conferred it upon a little boy who is "out of all justice denied in consolation and profit of a proper birthday" even though he is a scion of royalty. That little boy is Prince Edward, the young son of the duke and duchess of Kent.

Or she might pass it along to another member of the royal house of her native England—young Prince Edward's aunt, the duchess of Gloucester. Some other notables born on December 25 are Evangeline Booth, world commander of the Salvation Army; Helen Twelvetrees, actress; Rebecca West, novelist; Gladys Swarthout, opera singer; Robert L. Ripley, the "Believe It or Not" man; Paul Manchip, sculptor; Belle Baker, singer, and Jerry Rodman, six-day bicycle racer.

which enables me to sign myself your revered and delighted name-father."

Two years later Mrs. Ide took her two daughters to Samoa to her father. They arrived on November 12 and were met by Ide and Stevenson. The next day, being little Annie's "new birthday," she was a guest at a huge feast which the natives had arranged for Stevenson in honor of his birthday which he, unknown to them, had "willed" to Six years after the little girl in Vermont had been made happy by Robert Louis Stevenson, who "willed" her birthday, another little girl in New York city was also made happy by a writer, but in a different way.

One day in September, 1897, there came to the office of the New York Sun this letter:

Dear Editor—
I am eight years old.
Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus.
Please tell me the truth is there a Santa Claus?
Virginia O'Hanlon.
115 West 114th Street

Thereupon Francis P. Church, an editorial writer, wrote a reply which was printed as an editorial in the Sun on September 21, 1897. It said:

IS THERE A SANTA CLAUS?

We take pleasure in answering at once and thus prominently the communication below, expressing at the same time our great gratification that its faithful author is numbered among the friends of the Sun:

Dear Editor—I am eight years old. Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus.

Papa says: "If you see it in the Sun it's so."

Please tell me the truth; "is there a Santa Claus?"

"Virginia O'Hanlon."

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or little children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no child-like faith then, no poetry, no romance to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus? You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

You may tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernatural beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus? Thank God! he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia; nay, ten times ten thousand years from now he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

A "Newspaper Classic." Around Christmas time, the next year after this editorial appeared in the Sun, that newspaper began receiving requests from its readers: "Please reprint the editorial called 'Is There a Santa Claus?'" Each year thereafter it received the same request and each year the editorial was reprinted in the columns of the Sun.

More than that, it was reprinted in other newspapers which also received the same request annually. It became a "Newspaper Classic," which has been reproduced thousands of times during the 40 years that have elapsed since it first appeared, and it has been translated into many foreign languages—even the Chinese!

Next to Clement C. Moore's poem, "A Visit From St. Nicholas" (also called "The Night Before Christmas"), this editorial is probably the best known bit of writing associated with Christmas ever produced in America and it seems destined, like Santa Claus, to live forever.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Make a bag on a hanger.

THIS bag has been a great success. Several others can be made for different purposes. They are good to hang in the closet or the sewing room for patterns or small equipment. When traveling I find a little bigger one perfect for laundry. The size shown here requires 3/4 yard of bright ticking. You will notice in the sketch that French seams are used. This makes the first stitching of the seams on the right side. Trim close to this stitching, turn the bag inside out and stitch the seams again so that the raw edges are covered. Punch a small hole in the center top for the hanger hook. Clip today's lesson and add it to the many gift suggestions contained in the books offered below.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—Sewing, for the Home Decorator, is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make the most delightful gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Books are 25 cents each. Crazypatch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

It's a Dress

Customer—Isn't the price rather high for such a little pillow?
Shop Assistant—Well, you see, madam, down is now up.
